ALBANIA

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

Albania lies between 39° and 42° N. latitude and between 18° and 22° E. longitude; it is bordered by Yugoslavia to the north and east, Greece to the south and the Adriatic and Ionian Seas to the west. The maximum length of the country is 336.2 km. and its maximum breadth is 148.2 km. Much of Albania is mountainous, particularly northern Albania where the mountains continue the Crna Gora chain of Montenegro, and in the east along the Macedonian border. Albania is one of the highest countries in Europe, having an average height of 708 metres above sea-level. Throughout its history, Albania has been subjected to earthquakes. Climate is Mediterranean throughout most of the country. The Adriatic and Ionian Seas play a moderating role in the country's climate, although frequent cyclones in the winter months make the weather unstable. The average temperature is 14° C. in the north-east and 18°C. in the south-west. The language is Albanian, Tosk and Geg being the two main dialects. The literary language is being formed on the basis of a strong fusion of the two dialects with the phonetic and morphological structure of Tosk prevailing. Religion in Albania has been officially abolished but there are very small numbers of Roman Catholics in the north and Greek Orthodox in the south. There is virtually no formal practice of the previously predominant Muslim religion. The flag is red with a black two-headed eagle topped by a five-pointed star. The capital is Tirana.

Recent History

The Albanian Party of Labour was founded in 1941. The leader of the Party, Enver Hoxha, led the Liberation Army against the Germans and the Italian occupation of Albania. During the war years Albania suffered severe losses—28,000 killed and 43,000 deported out of a population of 1.1 million. Independence was finally proclaimed in 1944, and in 1946 Albania became a People's Republic. Enver Hoxha has been in the seat of power since that date. In the immediate post-war years, Albania was largely a dependency of Yugoslavia, the two countries establishing a monetary and customs union. Yugoslavia's influence and aid was gradually replaced by that of the Soviet Union, and after the breach between Yugoslavia and the Soviet Union in 1949, Albania remained a firm ally of the latter under Stalin. Following the death of Stalin in 1953, Albania became alienated from the Soviet Union over Khrushchev's policy of rapprochement with Yugoslavia. Relations deteriorated until in 1961 diplomatic relations with the U.S.S.R. were broken off. The Soviet Union's place as Albania's main ally and benefactor was taken by the People's Republic of China. Albania virtually ceased to participate in the activities of CMEA in 1961 and in 1968 she withdrew from the Warsaw Pact. In most aspects of political and ideological policy Albania follows the People's Republic of China, and in 1968 experienced a minor "cultural revolution". In 1971 Albania sponsored the motion whereby the People's Republic of China gained admission to the United Nations, of which Albania herself had been a member since 1955. Recently, however, various international contacts have been developing, and trade and diplomatic relations have been established with many countries, including, notably, Greece, Yugoslavia and several west European countries. The general elections of September 1970 showed a 99.7 per cent vote in favour of the Democratic Front.

Government

Albania is a People's Republic with a one-party system of government. The supreme legislative organ is the People's Assembly, elected for a four-year term by all citizens over 18 years of age. The Assembly elects a Presidium which fulfils the functions of Head of State as a collective organ of leadership under the President of the Presidium. The Council of Ministers is appointed, and can be dismissed, by the People's Assembly. The Constitution explicitly recognizes the special position of the Albanian Party of Labour which works closely with the Government and is the main policy making body. At its congresses the Party elects the Central Committee which, in turn, elects the Political Bureau.

The primary organs of local government are the District People's Councils, which are elected for a three-year term by all citizens over 18 years of age. As with the People's Assembly, candidates are nominated by local organizations of the Party of Labour, the Democratic Front, Trade Unions, the Labour Youth Union, the Women's Union or by other mass organizations. The People's Councils elect Executive Committees made up of a Chairman, Deputy Chairman, Secretary and members. In cases of conflict in the People's Councils, disputes are referred to the People's Assembly or to government departments. Tirana, the capital, is divided into ten townships.

Defence

Defence in Albania is conducted under the auspices of the People's Army which was founded in 1943. Military service is compulsory and lasts for two years in the Army and for three years in the Air Force and the Navy. Latest figures for the total strength of the armed forces are 42,000, comprising Army 35,000, Navy 3,000, Air Force 4,000. Defence estimates for 1971 totalled 580 million leks. Paramilitary training is now compulsory for all schoolchildren and students; the internal security force numbers 12,500, and there is a frontier force of 25,000.

Reports from reliable sources indicate that a defence agreement was concluded between Albania and China, following the Soviet intervention in Czechoslovakia in 1968. As a result, it is now believed that there are Chinese ground and air missiles in Albania, together with a few Chinese divisions. Chinese submarines have had the use of Albanian ports, formally used by the Soviet Union.

Economic Affairs

Before liberation in 1944 Albania was an extremely backward country. Its semi-feudal social system was dominated by Italy to the extent that the economy was half-feudal, half-colonial. Before liberation 80 per cent of the population was illiterate, and 87 per cent of the people worked in agriculture. By 1965 Albania had been turned into a socialist agrarian-industrial country. The Albanian economy operates on the principles of the public ownership of the means of production, planned management of the national economy and a certain level of financial autonomy for the enterprises. Each individual enterprise operates under the auspices of a single state plan. The year 1951 saw the beginning of long-term planning, with the first Five-Year Plan (1951-55). During the third Five-Year Plan (1961-65) Albania was able to survive the economic blockade imposed on her by the U.S.S.R. The fourth Five-Year Plan (1966-70), which was marked by a drive to reduce bureaucracy and excessive centralization, was successfully completed five months ahead of schedule. During the period, total industrial output rose by 83 per cent, agricultural production by 28 per cent, state investment by 55 per cent, national income by 55 per cent and real per capita income by 17 per cent. Between 1966 and 1970, 79 per cent of state investment was directed into production sectors, while 21 per cent went into cultural sectors. Albania has now embarked on her fifth Five-Year Plan (1971-75), which envisages that production of coal will have risen by 105 per cent in 1975, chrome production by 93 per cent and copper by 77 per cent. An increase of 66 per cent is planned for exports and 44 per cent for imports.

Industry now utilizes natural resources, and Albania refines her own oil. Important items in production include copper and iron, agricultural raw materials, machinery and equipment, chemical materials, fertilizers, building materials and textiles. Industrial products account for about 80 per cent of Albania's exports. Whereas in 1938 industrial production accounted for 9.1 per cent of total production in the country, in 1970 it accounted for 60.8 per cent, output increasing 64-fold. Agricultural production has increased threefold since before the Second World War, and the area of cultivable land has doubled. During the post-war years there has been an extensive socialist transformation of the countryside: land reclamation, mechanization and complete collectivization of agriculture, utilization of chemicals, etc. Albania's principal exports include chrome and ferro-nickel ore, copper wire, bitumen, tobacco and cigarettes, timber and furniture, textiles, craftwork, canned foods, wine and other beverages, fruit and vegetables, etc.

Albania's breach with the Soviet Union in the years 1960-61 damaged the Albanian economy. The Soviet Union withdrew all aid, left many projects only half-completed, ceased supplies of industrial equipment and cancelled economic agreements. The economic blockade imposed on Albania by the U.S.S.R. left her virtually in total European isolation. In recent years trade and contacts with China have increased considerably and the Albanian economy has overcome the setbacks of 1960-61. Particular progress has been made in the spheres of copper, chromium, nickel and coal production and electric power generation. Crop yields have increased considerably, particularly wheat and maize. Almost 45 per cent of Albania's foreign trade is now with China. A joint Sino-Albanian shipping company has been formed, having 14 ocean-going ships with a total tonnage of 50,000 tons, and in June 1965 an agreement was signed which, with subsequent trade protocols, provides Albania with financial, technical and material aid. This has greatly helped achieve the complete electrification of the country in 1970. With the completion of the Mao Tse-Tung hydro-electric plant and the Korça thermo-electric plant in 1971, total power output reached 2,000 million kWh. In 1969 a special protocol was signed in Peking which allowed for Chinese participation in many new Albanian export industries. In 1970 Albania signed a long-term trade and economic agreement with China, in accordance with which, China has granted long-term interest-free loans.

Some 95 per cent of Albania's foreign trade is with the socialist countries, although trade with non-communist countries is growing annually. Albania is currently trading with 40 countries of the world and has recently signed trade protocols with various socialist, Western and developing countries.

Transport and Communications

There are 302 kilometres of railway track in Albania linking the main cities (including branch lines), all of it built since 1944; a new line linking Elbasan with Prenjas is under construction. Rail transport accounts for 24 per cent of all land transportation and 4,019,000 passengers travelled by rail in 1967. Roads now link the remotest regions of the country although, despite progress in the sphere of road building the lesser roads, particularly in the highlands, are mostly unsuitable for motor transport. A total of 55,934,000 passengers travelled on road services in 1967. There is a marked absence of motor vehicles in Albania—there are no private automobiles and very few official cars, even in the capital. The most common forms of transport are the bicycle and the mule. Albania has a developing sea transport; over 104,000 tons of goods were transported by sea in Albanian ships in 1967. Ships use the main ports of Durrës, Vlorë and Saranda. Under the 1966-70 Five-Year Plan, several targets in the field of transport were exceeded, the volume of goods transported increasing by 53 per cent. There is a new airport at Rinas for international flights, but there is no internal air service.

Social Welfare

In Albania all medical services are free of charge. There are now hospitals, clinics and maternity homes throughout the country which provide free treatment for the entire population. In 1969 there were 158 hospitals and 1,400 physicians. Between 1965 and 1970, the number of the population to one doctor dropped from 1,870 to 1,180. The 1969 health budget amounted to 238,542,000 leks, 5.3 per cent of the state budget, while in 1971 socio-cultural expenditure accounted for 25.8 per cent of the budget. Kindergartens and nursery schools receive subsidies of 68 and 66 per cent respectively. There is a non-contributory state social insurance system for all workers, and a pension system for the old and disabled. Income tax has been abolished for all workers, employees and co-operative members, government expenditure being met by surpluses earned by state enterprises. Albania is thus one of the first communist countries in Europe to be free of direct taxation for her people. A new state social insurance law came into force on January 1st, 1967, which provides many social benefits for the population in addition to free medical attention.

Education

By 1956, illiteracy had been wiped out among persons under 40 years of age. About 20 per cent of children in the age group of three to six years attend nursery school (kopshtë); children between the ages of seven and fifteen years attend an "eighth-grade school" which is compulsory. Secondary schools in Albania may be divided into three main categories, namely twelve-year schools (shkollat 12-vjeçare) giving four-year courses which complete the education of the eighth-grade school, secondary technical-professional schools (shkollat e mesme tekniko-profesionale) which combine vocational training with a general education, and lower vocational schools (shkollat e ulte profesionale) which train workers in the fields of agriculture and industry, etc. The school-year in secondary schools lasts six and a half months. In addition, all pupils must spend two and a half months working in industrial or agricultural production and one month in military training. In the 1970-71 school year there were 661,000 students enrolled at eighth-grade, secondary and high schools. In 1970 26,000 students were enrolled at 8 higher education institutes in Albania; the State University of Tirana has 7,140 full-time and 8,150 night and correspondence students, with another 1,714 registered at its branches throughout the country. Students at higher education institutes spend seven months of every year at the institute, two months in production work, one month in physical culture and military training, and two months on vacation.

Tourism

Mass tourism is alien to Albanians, but within the last six years it has been officially encouraged; in 1970 Enver Hoxha, First Secretary of the Party of Labour, specifically stressed the need to develop tourism and for Albanians to adopt a less uncompromising attitude towards the entry of tourists into the country. All aspects of tourism in Albania are handled by Albturist, the official state tourist department. The development of tourism began in 1956 but has only seriously been encouraged by the state over the last four or five years. There are few recognized resorts apart from Durrës, although great potential exists in the beauty spots on the coast and in the scenery of the interior. Visas are essential for foreign visitors. A very favourable exchange rate of 30 new leks to the £1 sterling is in operation for tourists.

Sport

Sport is officially encouraged in Albania, association football and volleyball being among the most popular sports. Albania now has many new sports facilities. Some 250,000 people participated in the recent second national Spartakiad.

Public Holidays

1972: May 1 (May Day), November 7 (Victory of the October Socialist Revolution), November 28 (Proclamation of Independence), November 29 (Liberation Day 1944).

1973: January 1 (New Year's Day), January 11 (Proclamation of the Republic).

THE CONSTITUTION

THE Constitution of the People's Republic of Albania was adopted in March 1946 and amended by the People's Assembly on July 4th, 1950. By its terms Albania is a People's Republic, the supreme legislative organ being the People's Assembly which is elected for a term of four years by a general, equal, direct and secret ballot on the basis of one deputy to every 8,000 persons. All citizens over 18 years of age have the right to elect and stand for election. The People's Assembly is convoked by a decree of its Presidium for two ordinary sessions a year, and for extraordinary sessions by a decision of the Presidium or at the request of one third of the deputies. The People's Assembly elects its Presidium, which consists of a President, being also the President of the Albanian People's Republic, three Vice-Presidents, a Secretary, and ten members. It also elects the Council of Ministers and the Supreme Court of Justice, and appoints the Attorney-General and his assistants. Laws and amendments to the Constitution are made valid by a majority vote of the People's Assembly.

The country is divided into twenty-six regions for the purpose of local administration. The local organs of State power are the People's Councils, elected for a three-year term.

JUDICIAL SYSTEM

Justice is administered under the Constitution by the Supreme Court, and by District, Village, County and Township Courts created by a special law in October 1968 as links of the judicial system which functions within the ranks of the people. Military Tribunals are held at the Supreme and District Courts. Courts of Justice are independent in the exercise of their functions, and are separated from the administration.

Until March 1966 the judicial system was supervised by a Minister of Justice and his officials. This department now no longer exists and its principle responsibilities are discharged by the Supreme Court. The current Penal Code came into force in September 1952, while the Civil Code has gradually been adopted since 1954. Trials are held normally in public. The accused is assured the right of defence, and the principle of presumption of innocence is sanctioned by Article 13 of the Code of Penal Procedure. The Supreme Court and the District Courts are made up of a professional judge and two Assistant Judges, who are workers elected in the same way as the judges. Trials in the Village, County and Township Courts are held before an Assistant Judge from the District Court and two social activists. Second-degree cases are held in the Supreme Court before three judges, and in the District Courts before Assistant Judges. The verdicts of the lower courts may be altered, within the law, by the higher courts, and judges may be recalled before the expiration of their term by their electors or the organ which has elected them.

Public order is kept by the forces of the People's Police, by the organs of State Security and by frontier forces, all of which are administered by the Ministry of the Interior. The People's Police is also dependent on the local organs of State Power.

The Supreme Court is elected for a four-year term by the People's Assembly; between sessions of the Assembly, individual members of the Court are elected by the Presidium of the People's Assembly. The District Courts are elected for a three-year term by a secret ballot of all voting citizens.

President of the Supreme Court: ARANIT ÇELA.

THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL

The Attorney-General and his deputies are appointed by the People's Assembly. District Attorneys are appointed by the Attorney-General and are responsible only to him.

Attorney-General: DHORI PANARITI.

RELIGION

Although religion has been officially abolished in Albania, certain vestiges still remain in the mountainous regions. A continuing atheist propaganda campaign is maintained, mainly involving the youth organizations. There is no formal practice of the previously predominant Muslim religion although certain social traditions persist. All religious institutions were closed by the government in 1967. All of the old mosques have now been shut down and are preserved as centres of cultural interest. Formerly the population was approximately 70 per cent Muslim, 15 per cent Roman Catholic (in the north) and 15 per cent Greek Orthodox (in the south).

Muslims:

Sunni: Grand Mufti HAFIZ SULEJMAN MYRTO; organized in four zones (Tirana, Shkodër, Gjinokaster, Korça), each under a Grand Mufti.

Bektashi: Primate ILJAZ FEHMI DEDE (also World Primate of Bektashi sect).

Autocephalous Orthodox Church: Primate and Archbishop of all Albania SOFRON BOROVA.

Roman Catholics: centre at Shkodër; Apostolic Administrator ERNESTO ÇOBA, Kryepeshkevi, Shkodër.

THE PRESS

The Albanian Press recognizes itself as a powerful medium of educational and organizational propaganda with a profound Marxist-Leninist ideological content, playing an important role in the Communist moulding of the people and in mobilizing them for the building of socialism and the defence of the country. It expresses Party doctrine probably more forcefully than any other European Communist press, aligning itself with the Chinese in carrying on the "ideological-cultural revolution" in a common struggle against imperialism and "Khrushchevian and Titoist modern revisionism". For this reason the style of the Albanian Press is emotive and with a continuous bias.

A policy of decentralization is suggested by the development in recent years of numerous local newspapers, generally the organs of the regional Party central committees.

In 1938 there were 15 newspapers and periodicals published in Albania; even disregarding the growth of local newspapers, this figure has now trebled. The most important publications are the Communist Party daily, Zëri i Popullit (circ. 100,000), and Bashkimi (circ. 25,000), the organ of the Democratic Front.

The Albanian news agency, ATA, has a monopoly of news distribution in Albania and works in co-operation with Hsinhua, the Chinese agency.

TRADE UNIONS

Trade unions were established for the first time in 1945. Until 1958 there was a separate trade union for every principal industry. Now all the trade unions have been merged into a single organization with officials designated to deal with the problems which arise in particular industries. The trade union movement employs some 150 full-time officials. Elected leadership at all levels is a feature of the Albanian trade union organization. Local and district committees meet monthly, and every four years a national conference elects a general council. Trade union membership is now approximately 350,000.

780 km. of new roads were built between 1945 and 1960.

SHIPPING

Drejtoria e Agjensisë së Vaporave (Shipping Administration): Durrës.

The chief ports are Durrës, Shëngjin, Vlora and Saranda. Durrës harbour was dredged in 1967 to allow for bigger ships. There is a national merchant fleet which is rapidly expanding.

CIVIL AVIATION

Albtransport (Air Agency): Bld. Stalin 17, Tirana.

There is a small but modern airport at Rinas, but there is no regular internal air service. Albania is served by the following foreign airlines: Alitalia, Interflug, Malev and Pakistan International Airlines.

TOURISM

Albturist: Bld. Dëshmorët e Kombit, Tirana; Dir. MURAT MEMA.

CULTURE

National Opera and Ballet: Tirana; Dir. KOCO VASILI.
People's Theatre: Tirana; Dir. XHEMAL BROJA.

ATOMIC ENERGY

The nuclear physics laboratory built with Chinese aid has now been commissioned.

UNIVERSITY

Universiteti Shtetëror i Tiranës (State University of Tirana): Tirana; 573 teachers, 7,140 students (1971).

ANDORRA

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Capital

The small principality of Andorra (founded in 1278) consists of 465 square kilometres in the Eastern Pyrenees, bounded by France and Spain, and lying about half way between Barcelona and Toulouse. The climate is alpine with much snow in winter and a warm summer. The official language is Catalan. The population numbers about 20,500 of whom nearly 6,000 are Andorrans. The national colours are blue, yellow and red. The population is entirely Catholic and the territory is included in the Spanish Suffragan See of Urgel. The capital is Andorra la Vella.

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

Andorra has no proper constitution, and its peculiar autonomy is a legacy of feudal conditions; the country, although administratively independent, has no clear international status. Andorra is a principality, under the suzerainty of the President of France and the Spanish Bishop of Urgel. The valleys pay a nominal bi-annual tax, the questia, to France and to the Bishop of Urgel. France is represented in Andorra by the Viguiet de France, and the Bishop by the Viguiet Episcopal. Each co-ruler has set up a permanent delegation for Andorran Affairs. The Prefect of the East Pyrenees is the Permanent Delegate of the French Co-Prince.

Episcopal Co-Prince: H.E. DR. JOAN MARTI ALANIS, Bishop of Urgel.

French Co-Prince: H.E. GEORGES POMPIDOU.

Viguiet Episcopal: JAUME SANSÀ NEQUI.

General Council of the Valleys

This council submits motions and proposals to the permanent delegation. The twenty-four members represent the parishes of Andorra and are elected for four years, half the Council being renewed every two years. All men and women of the age of 25 and over may vote. The Council nominates the First Syndic (Syndic Procureur Général) and the Second Syndic, who cease to be members of the Council on their election. In the December 1971 General Election, two "progressive" candidates gained seats.

First Syndic: FRANCESC ESCUDE FERRERO.

JUDICIAL SYSTEM

Civil Law: judicial power is exercised in civil matters in the first instance by two civil judges (Bayles), one appointed by the Viguiet de France and the other by the Viguiet Episcopal. There is a Judge of Appeal appointed alternatively by France and Spain, and in the third instance (Tercera Sala) cases are heard in the Supreme Court of Andorra at Perpignan or in the court at Urgel.

Criminal Law: is administered by Tribunal des Cortis, consisting of the two Viguiers, the Judge of Appeal, the two Bayles and two members of the Council General.

ECONOMIC AFFAIRS

Andorra's products are mainly agricultural, cereals, potatoes, tobacco and vegetables being the principal crops. Livestock is raised and there are approximately 25,000 sheep, 3,000 cattle and 1,000 horses. There is a milk farm outside the capital. Iron, lead, alum, stone and timber are produced. Andorra la Vella is a great market for all European goods owing to favourable excise conditions; many foreigners trade in the principality. Smuggling has reputedly flourished in the past, and customs at the borders are stringent.

RADIO

Radio-Andorra: Roc des Anelletes, B.P. 1, Andorra la Vella; Gen. Man. M. DEGOY; privately owned, broadcasts in French and Spanish on 428m. (701 k/c); publs. La Voz de Radio Andorra (monthly), Bulletin d'Information (weekly).

Sud-Radio: 7 ave. Meritxell, Andorra la Vella; Dir. J.-L. HORBETTE; daily transmissions on short and medium wave-lengths.

FINANCE

French and Spanish currencies are in use. There is a 3 per cent levy on alcohol and motor fuels. There is no income tax, death duty or customs. Andorra's first budget was drawn up in 1954.

PRINCIPAL BANKS

Banc Agricol i Comercial d'Andorra: B.P. 21, Andorra la Vella; f. 1930; Chair. M. CERQUEDA.

Banca Cassany: 41 Avinguda Meritxell, Andorra la Vella; f. 1958; Dir. M. DIAL; Deputy Dir. R. MORESGUI.

Crédit Andorrà: Man. Dir. M. J. BANSSELL.

Banca Mora: Les Escaldes; Chair. F. Mora.

TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS

Roads are maintained by Fuerzas Hidroeléctricas de Andorra S.A. A good road connects the French and Spanish frontiers (7,800 feet). There are about 11,000 automobiles in Andorra. There is a motor bus service between Andorra la Vella and Seo de Urgel in Spain, Barcelona-Bourg-Madame and Perpignan in France. Postal services are run by the French Post Office, while telephones are managed by Radio Andorra.

TOURISM

Sindicat d'Initiativa de les valls d'Andorra: Andorra la Vella.

Andorra is much visited by tourists, winter and summer. In winter many slopes are used for skiing and in summer the high fields are occupied by campers. There are about 2,000,000 visitors a year.

AUSTRIA

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Republic of Austria lies in Central Europe, between Switzerland, Germany, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Yugoslavia and Italy. The climate varies sharply owing to great differences in elevation. The mean annual temperature lies between 45° and 48°F. (7° and 9°C.). The population is 98 per cent German-speaking, with small Croat, Czech and Slovene-speaking minorities. About 90 per cent are Roman Catholics, over 6 per cent Protestants, with about 10,500 Jews. The flag consists of three horizontal bands—red, white and red. The capital is Vienna.

Recent History

Austria was annexed by Germany in 1938. After the Second World War the country was divided into four zones occupied by forces of the U.S.A., U.S.S.R., Britain and France. On May 15th, 1955 the four powers signed a State Treaty with Austria ending the occupation and recognizing her independence. Parliament then passed an act on October 26th which declared Austria a permanently neutral state. However, she applied for membership of the United Nations and was accepted on December 15th, 1955.

A period of over twenty years of coalition government came to an end in April 1966 with the formation of a cabinet composed of the People's Party only. In the 1970 general elections for the Nationalrat (First Chamber) no party could achieve an absolute majority and though a coalition government was expected the Socialist Party, with three seats more than the People's Party, decided to take office led by Dr. Kreisky. The Socialists had already gained control of the Bundesrat (Second Chamber) in 1969. However, another election was called in October 1971 at which the Socialist Party also achieved an absolute majority in the Nationalrat.

Government

Austria is a federal republic divided into nine provinces, each of which has its own Provincial Assembly (Landtag). There is a bi-cameral parliamentary system. The first chamber, the Nationalrat (National Council), is elected on a basis of proportional representation by universal adult suffrage. The second chamber, the Bundesrat (Federal Council), is composed of representatives of the Provincial Assemblies. Members of the Nationalrat are elected for four years. The President, elected for six years, is the Head of State.

Defence

In an amendment to her constitution in 1955, Austria declared her permanent neutrality. The total strength of the armed forces is not allowed to exceed 55,000. National Service lasts for six months in the army and up to two years in the air force. As a rule about 50,000 men are conscripted each year. At present the total strength of the army is around 44,000 and that of the air force about 4,350. Approximately 4 per cent of the budget for 1971 was allocated to defence.

Economic Affairs

The Austrian economy is no longer mainly dependent on tourism and agriculture, as the manufacturing industries now account for some 37 per cent of the Gross National Product.

Austria possesses iron ore and oil deposits, brown coal, magnesite, lead and some copper. Hydro-electric power resources are also being developed and electricity is now being supplied to neighbouring countries. After the war some quarter of Austrian industry was nationalised, including the largest iron and steel works, a section of the chemical industry, almost all coal and ore mining, most heavy engineering and electrical works, ship building companies and oil production and processing. Industrial relations are good and the number of strikes per year is lower than almost any other country in Europe. In the last decade production has risen steadily and had increased by 30.7 per cent between 1964 and 1969.

Tourism is a valuable source of income, winter and summer. The Danube is popular with excursionists and foreign tourists and is important commercially. Most river trade is with the German Federal Republic (about 5 million tons annually). A small but increasing traffic passes between Austria and Czechoslovakia, Hungary and Yugoslavia. Barges of up to 1,000 tons can be accommodated.

In spite of recent trends in agriculture towards mechanization and larger holdings, 18 per cent of the working population is engaged in agriculture and forestry and the system is still mainly based on small holdings. However, in 1969 they supplied 84 per cent of the country's needs, 2 per cent less than the previous year.

Economic growth has been steadily maintained for the last 15 years, and in 1970 there was an increase of 7.1 per cent in the Gross National Product. The strength of the economy was shown in May 1971 by the 5.05 per cent revaluation of the Schilling. The living standard is still somewhat below that of most advanced European economies but it is rising steadily and may be soon expected to reach the level of her neighbours. The national income per head is about 38,000 schillings per year.

Austria has been a member of the European Free Trade Association since 1960 and now more than one fifth of her trade is with member countries; another fifth is with Eastern Europe. However, her principle markets remain in the Federal Republic of Germany, Switzerland and Italy and she has applied in 1961, 1967 and 1970 for a form of Associate Membership of the European Economic Community which would not compromise her neutrality.

Transport

Austria has a highly developed system of public transport by road, rail, air and river. The Danube provides Austria with an artery particularly important for the transport of timber, steel and other raw materials. A passenger service is maintained on the Upper Danube and between Vienna and the Black Sea. There are six modern airports. Railways total 5,908 kilometres (3,692 miles), roads 95,000 kilometres (60,000 miles), and commercial waterways 320 kilometres (200 miles).

AUSTRIA—(INTRODUCTORY SURVEY)

Social Welfare

Social Insurance in Austria dates back to the 1880s. Regulations introduced by the German regime in 1938 were maintained until the new Social Insurance Law of 1956. A comprehensive Social Welfare Scheme covering Industrial Accident Insurance, Old Age Pensions, Health Insurance, etc. is compulsory for all employees and otherwise insured persons. There are also provisions for other groups such as unemployment insurance, children's allowances, maternity allowances, rent allowances, provision for war victims, etc.

Education

Since 1962 education has been free and compulsory between the ages of 6 and 15. The central controlling body is the Federal Ministry of Education; provincial boards (Landesschulräte) supervise education in each of the nine federal provinces and district school boards (Bezirksschulräte) in local regions. Starting at the age of 6, all children undergo four years of education at a primary school (Volksschule). At the age of 10 they may transfer to secondary education, or continue until the age of 15 in the Volksschule or a Hauptschule (upper primary school). In a lesser number of cases the pupil enters one of the two forms of high school, the Gymnasium (generally arts biased) or the Realgymnasium (generally science and mathematics biased), in which he may study until the age of 18. Success in the Reifeprüfung (matriculation) constitutes a university or further education qualification. At the age of 14 there are numerous possibilities for transfer between those schools mentioned, and various other types of technical, vocational, and specialized educational establishments. Austria has four universities, the University of Vienna being one of the oldest in Europe.

Tourism

Austria's mountains, forests and valleys make it an ideal resort in both summer and winter. Celebrated beauty spots are the Salzkammergut Lake District, the Tyrol and Vorarlberg valleys and the Vienna woodlands. Vienna is a centre for music and art lovers and historians with its opera houses and concert halls, art galleries and museums. In winter thousands of visitors go to Austrian skiing resorts. Festivals are held all over Austria in the summer. Internationally famous are the Vienna Festival and the Salzburg Music Festival.

Receipts from tourism totalled 25,969 million schillings in 1970.

Visas are not required for nationals of the following countries: Algeria, Belgium, Denmark, El Salvador, Finland, France, Federal German Republic, Greece, Iceland, Italy, Liechtenstein, Luxembourg, Malta, Monaco, Morocco, The Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Pakistan, Peru, Portugal, San Marino, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, Turkey, United Kingdom.

Sport

Skiing and football are the most popular sports.

Public Holidays

1972: April 3 (Easter Monday), May 1 (Labour Day), May 11 (Ascension Day), May 22 (Whit Monday), June 10 (Corpus Christi), August 15 (The Assumption), October 26 (National Day), November 1 (All Saints' Day), December 8 (Immaculate Conception), December 25 and 26 (Christmas).

1973: January 1 (New Year's Day), January 6 (Epiphany).

Weights and Measures

The Metric System is in force.

Currency and Exchange Rates

The monetary unit is the Schilling (Sch.) divided into 100 Groschen.

Notes: Schilling 1,000, 500, 100, 50, 20.

Coins: Schilling 50, 25, 10, 5, 1; Groschen 50, 10, 5, 2, 1.

Exchange rate: 60.30 Schilling = £1 sterling

23.20 Schilling = $1 U.S.

AUSTRIA—(THE CONSTITUTION, THE GOVERNMENT)

THE CONSTITUTION

Austria is a democratic republic, having a president (Bundespräsident) elected directly by the people, and a two-chamber government. The republic is organized on the federal system, comprising the provinces (Länder) of Burgenland, Carinthia, Lower Austria, Upper Austria, Salzburg, Styria, Tyrol, Vorarlberg and Vienna. There is universal suffrage for men and women over the age of 20.

The National Council (Nationalrat) consists of 183 members, elected by universal direct suffrage, according to a system of proportional representation. It functions for a period of four years.

The Federal Council (Bundesrat) represents the federal provinces. Vienna sends 12 members, Lower Austria 10, Styria 8, Upper Austria 8, Carinthia 4, and the other provinces 3 each, making 54 in all. They are elected by the provincial governments, and function during the life of the provincial government which they represent.

For certain matters of special importance the two chambers meet together; this is known as a Bundesversammlung.

The President is the head of the State, and he holds office for six years. His powers include appointing ambassadors, conferring honours, etc. Although he is invested with special emergency powers, he normally acts on the authority of the Government, and it is the Government which is responsible to the National Council for governmental policy.

The Government consists of the Chancellor, the Vice-Chancellor, and the other ministers, who may vary in number. The Chancellor is chosen by the President from the party with the strongest representation in the newly elected National Council, and the other ministers are then chosen by the President on the advice of the Chancellor.

All new acts must be read and put to the vote in both houses. A new bill goes first to the National Council, where it usually has three readings, and secondly to the Federal Council, where it can be held up, but not vetoed.

The Constitution also provides for appeals by the Government to the electorate on specific points by means of referendum. There is further provision that if 200,000 or more electors present a petition to the Government, the Government must lay it before the National Council.

The Provincial Diet (Landtag) exercises the same functions in each province as the National Council does in the State. The members of the Landtag elect a government (Landesregierung) consisting of a provincial governor (Landeshauptmann) and his councillors (Landesräte). They are responsible to the Landtag.

The spheres of legal and administrative competence of both national and Provincial governments are clearly defined. The constitution distinguishes four groups:

1. Law-making and administration are the responsibility of State: e.g. foreign affairs, justice and finance.

2. Law-making is the responsibility of the State, administration is the responsibility of the provinces: e.g. elections, population matters, and road traffic.

3. The State lays down the rudiments of the law, the provinces make the law and administer it: e.g. charity, rights of agricultural workers, land reform.

4. Law-making and administration are the responsibility of the provinces in all matters not expressly assigned to the state: e.g. municipal affairs, building, theatres and cinemas.

Verwaltungsgerichtshof (Administrative Court): Vienna I, Judenplatz 11; deals with matters affecting the legality of administration; Pres. Dr. OSKAR DONNER; Vice-Pres. Dr. SERGIUS BOROTHA.

SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT

Oberster Gerichtshof: Vienna I, Museumstrasse 12; Pres. Dr. FRANZ PALLIN; Vice-Pres. Dr. FRANZ BERGER and Dr. WOLFGANG LASSMANN.

The Austrian Legal System is based on the principle of a division between legislative, administrative and judicial power. There are three supreme courts (Verfassungsgerichtshof, Verwaltungsgerichtshof and Oberster Gerichtshof). The judicial courts are organized into 229 local courts (Bezirksgerichte), 20 provincial and district courts (Landes- und Kreisgerichte), and 4 higher provincial courts (Oberlandesgerichte) in Vienna, Graz, Innsbruck and Linz.

Trial by jury was re-introduced in 1951 for the first time since 1934. The death penalty was abolished in 1950.

THE PRESS

Austria's Wiener Zeitung, founded in 1703, is the oldest daily paper published in the world, and Austria's Press history dates back to 1615 when its first newspaper was published. During the nineteenth century the Press suffered repression under the absolute monarchy and this situation was not legally liberalized until the Press Law of 1922 which states that "The freedom of the Press is assured and subject only to the limitations defined in this law". During the years of German annexation the Press was to a large extent subordinated to the Nazi propaganda machine. After the Second World War the Allies published several newspapers including the original Kurier, and the Austrian Press rapidly recovered from the effects of a totalitarian administration.

Agitation within the Press against relatively heavy taxation and costs has been appeased to some extent by concessions in the 1969 Purchase Tax Law. Reform has also been demanded in the Press Law with particular regard to right of reply. According to this section of law, any person or persons who feel themselves to have been subject to an incorrect statement in the Press can (and often do) demand to have a formal reply of equal volume and position published in the offending newspaper. This is considered by the majority of the Press as an obstacle to its freedom. Other objections have been raised on such points as the lack of constitutional guarantees for freedom of opinion and circulation, and the compulsory supply of copy to the Ministry of the Interior. The Austrian Press is still subject to Nachzensur (after-censorship) and a paper's registered Verantwortlicher Redakteur (Responsible Editor) is penally liable for material printed which contravenes the law on such points as libel or "corruption of minors". For many years no "Responsible Editor" has been imprisoned, although fines have been imposed and issues confiscated. In practice there is complete freedom of opinion and circulation in the Austrian Press subject to the restrictions of the 1922 Press Law.

AUSTRIA—(THE PRESS)

In 1961 the Austrian Press Council (Presserat) was founded. It consists of representatives of the publishers and journalists and its principal duties are to watch over the freedom of the Press and to ascertain grievances of the Press. In 1971, 149 publications appeared in Austria, of which 112 were weekly newspapers and 32 dailies. Daily circulation on weekdays amounted to 2,331,200 copies in 1970. The political parties each have a newspaper, and independent papers tend to follow a political line. Although there is a strong provincial Press in Graz, Salzburg, and Innsbruck, the country's Press is centered in Vienna. The three highest circulation dailies are the Kronen-Zeitung, the Kurier and the Arbeiter-Zeitung. The Presse (independent) and the Arbeiter Zeitung (socialist) are the country's most respected dailies. In November 1970 the highly respected Volksblatt, the most important People's Party daily, ceased publication owing to financial difficulties, but in 1971 the Niederösterreichisches Volksblatt was founded as a replacement organ of the People's Party in Vienna.

BELGIUM

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Kingdom of Belgium lies in north-west Europe bounded to the north by the Netherlands, to the east by Luxembourg and Germany, to the South by France, and to the west by the North Sea. The climate is temperate. Flemish, spoken in the North, and French, spoken in the South, are the two main official languages. The Law of August 1963 established four linguistic regions, the French, Flemish and German-speaking areas and Brussels, which is situated in the Flemish part and has bilingual status. Approximately 60 per cent of the population are Flemish-speaking, 40 per cent French-speaking and some 100,000 speak German. The population is overwhelmingly Roman Catholic. The flag carries three vertical stripes—black, yellow and red. The capital is Brussels.

Recent History

Since the Second World War, Belgium has emerged as one of the leaders of international co-operation in Europe. It is a founder member of the Benelux Economic Union, of Western European Union, the Council of Europe, the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development, the European Coal and Steel Community and the European Economic Community (the Common Market). As the headquarters of EEC, NATO and over 100 other international organizations, Brussels has become an important European capital. Belgium granted independence to her former colony, the Belgian Congo (now Zaire), in 1960 and the Trusteeship Territory of Ruanda-Urundi became independent in 1962 as the State of Rwanda and the Kingdom of Burundi.

The language dispute between the French-speaking Walloons and the Dutch-speaking Flemings has been the main problems in politics since the war. The government of Gaston Eyskens was peculiarly successful in surviving until December 1971 in an atmosphere of linguistic calm. The "Conférence Linguistique" was held in the autumn of 1969, but failed to achieve anything. In May 1970 the Government's attempts to introduce constitutional reforms which would provide cultural and economic decentralization and special voting procedures for Flemings and Walloons foundered over the problems of the status and territorial limits of Brussels.

The capital is officially bi-lingual; though the majority of the inhabitants are Francophone, thus making it an island in Dutch-speaking Flanders. The Flemings fear the gradual loss of the cultural identity of Flanders; the Walloons fear that they will be forced to conform to Flemish-speaking institutions. The Government bowed, in 1970, to some of the Flemish demands and as a result, the Walloons formed the "Committee of Public Safety for the Brussels area" and boycotted Parliamentary sessions. The borough elections in October 1970 brought success for the Walloons (F.D.F.) in Brussels and success for the Socialists over the whole country. At the end of November Mr. Eyskens, after a month of negotiating between the parties, re-introduced his reforms with concessions to both sides, and in spite of protests in Brussels, a revised Constitution incorporating the reforms has been accepted. Now Belgians are officially recognized as either Flemings or Walloons, and each community has regional powers in economic and cultural affairs. There are also provisions to ensure linguistic equality in central government and Parliament. Despite the initial success of the Eyskens government, the linguistic question remains unsettled; General elections in Autumn 1971 recorded advances in the standing of federalist linguistic parties on both sides. A Walloon landslide made Inner Brussels even more a French-speaking stronghold in Flanders, and though the main political parties held their ground, Mr. Eyskens was unable to form a new government until January 1972, after a two-month crisis.

Government

Legislative power is vested in the King, the Senate and the Chamber of Deputies. The Senate has three classes of members: directly elected, elected by Provincial Councils, and co-opted. Members of the Chamber of Deputies are elected directly by universal adult suffrage. The members of each house are elected for four years. Proportional representation is used. There are nine provinces.

Defence

Belgium is a member of NATO and maintains an army, navy and air force. The headquarters of SHAPE was transferred to Casteau in Belgium during 1967. Military service lasts 12 months and the total strength of the armed forces is 96,500, comprising Army 71,500, Navy 5,000, Air Force 20,000. The defence budget for 1971 totalled 29,700 million Belgian francs.

Economic Affairs

Because of its geographical position, Belgium is well situated for international trade and is one of the most successful importers and exporters in the world, maintaining a large merchant fleet. Over half Belgium's external trade is with the other members of the EEC. Principal individual trade partners are Federal Germany, the Netherlands, France and the U.S.A. Since 1921 Belgium and Luxembourg have formed an Economic Union, and in 1960 the Benelux Treaty, incorporating the Netherlands, came into force. The country is the most densely populated in Europe and is mainly industrial. Industrial activity has concentrated in recent years in the increasingly populous Flemish areas of the North, but the government is encouraging re-investment in the Southern Walloon region. There are two Ministers of Regional Economy. Apart from coal, and to a lesser extent clay, sand and stone, the country has no natural resources and purchases essential raw materials abroad; thus the export trade—of vital importance to the economy—is dependent largely on the state of the world market. About 40 per cent of Belgium's G.N.P. is exported. Major exports are iron and steel products, machinery, chemical and pharmaceutical goods, textiles and glass. Agriculture provides Belgium with about four-fifths of its food.

The year 1969 saw near record expansion, accompanied by a marked acceleration in price increases and wage rises.

BELGIUM—(INTRODUCTORY SURVEY)

In the second half of 1970 the boom began to ease off as a result of tight budget policy and restrictive monetary measures. 1970 saw the near completion of total economic union between the three Benelux countries; this established Benelux as a single customs area and also introduced co-ordination between the Prime Ministers on social affairs and industrial and transport policies.

The Bank Rate underwent eight increases between the end of 1968 and mid-1970, rising from 3½ per cent to 8½ per cent. To avoid the risk of inflation, the introduction of the Value Added Tax imposed by the EEC, was postponed until January 1971. The rapid expansion of the past three years did cause inflationary pressure, but this has been held in check during 1971, possibly due to the automatic linking of wage and salary increases to the cost of living index.

Transport and Communications

The Société Nationale des Chemins de Fer Belges maintains 4,165 km. of main line railway. On the roads, buses and trams (Société Nationale des Chemins de Fer Vicinaux) are much used. There are over 23,500 km. of main roads and seven international motorways. The navigable inland waterways cover over 1,768 km., and some canals are accessible to barges of 1,450 and 2,000 tons. The modernized port of Antwerp (now the third biggest in the world) handles a large tonnage of inland and ocean traffic and specializes in general cargo and containers. SABENA is one of the oldest and largest airlines in the world. Belgium's merchant fleet comprised 96 ships, totalling 958,696 tons, in 1970.

Social Welfare

Social Welfare is administered by the National Office for Social Security. Contributions are paid by employers and employees towards family allowances, health insurance, unemployment and pensions. Most allowances and pensions are tied to the cost of living index. Workers and employees are entitled to 3 weeks holiday for every twelve month period of work. They also receive a "holiday bonus". They are insured against accidents occurring on the work premises or on the way to and from work, though only bodily injuries are liable to such reparations. Family allowances in 1971 were as follows: 641 francs for the first child, 1,080 francs for the second child and for the third and for each of the following 1,512 francs per month. There is no housing problem in Belgium; on average 33,350 houses are built annually.

Education

Education in Belgium is compulsory from 6-14. A characteristic of Belgian education is the co-existence of two separate education systems: the école officielle is a state secular school and the école libre is a private denominational school receiving state subsidies. Under the School Pact of 1958 primary and secondary education were provided free and parents were given the right to choose the type of education for their children; in 1967 43 per cent of school age children attended écoles officielles and 57 per cent attended écoles libres. Under the 1963 Language of Instruction Act teaching is given in the language of the region; in the Brussels district teaching is done in the mother language of the pupil.

Primary education is from 6-12; for children who do not continue with secondary education, a two-year course attached to the primary school is provided, but this is now generally being replaced by the lower secondary school.

Secondary education consists of: general education, normale (for the training of primary school teachers), technical and artistic (vocational). General education at secondary level is divided into (a) humanités anciennes, traditionally based on classical literature, the course is essentially literary though including some scientific education. (b) humanités modernes centred either on mathematics, science or economics. Both sectors are divided into two three-year cycles and pupils may change from one sector to the other during the first four years of their course.

University Education: University entrance requirements are a minimum of marks at the end of the last year of secondary school plus a maturity examination. Courses are divided into a 2-3 year course of general preparation known as degree candidature followed by 2-3 years of specialization. There are five Universities, two of which are divided into French and Flemish-speaking sections.

The National Study Fund provides grants where necessary and nearly 35 per cent of students are receiving scholarships. In 1970 educational expenditure amounted to 68.7 million Belgian Francs and 18.9 per cent of the annual budget. Since the reforms of 1970, two Ministers of Education have been responsible for the French and Flemish-speaking regions respectively. The University of Louvain and the Free University of Brussels are divided into two linguistic sections.

Tourism

Ostend and other seaside towns attract many visitors. The forest-covered Ardennes is excellent hill-walking country. There are towns of rich historic and cultural interest such as Bruges, Ghent, and Antwerp.

Visas are not required for nationals of the following countries: Andorra, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bolivia, Brazil, Canada, Chile, Colombia, Costa-Rica, Cyprus, Denmark, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, Finland, France, German Federal Republic, Greece, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, Iceland, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Liechtenstein, Luxembourg, Malaysia, Mexico, Monaco, Morocco, The Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Norway, Pakistan, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Portugal, San Marino, Singapore, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, South Africa, Tunisia, United Kingdom, U.S.A., Uruguay, Vatican, Venezuela.

Sport

The most popular sport is football.

Public Holidays

1972: April 3 (Easter Monday), May 1 (Labour Day), May 11 (Ascension Day), May 22 (Whit Monday), July 21 (Independence Day), August 15 (The Assumption), November 1 (All Saint's Day), November 11 (Armistice Day), December 25 (Christmas Day).

1973: January 1 (New Year's Day).

THE CONSTITUTION

The Belgian Constitution has been considerably modified by amendment since its origin in 1830. Belgium is a constitutional monarchy. The central legislature consists of a Chamber of Representatives, and a Senate. The Chamber of Representatives consists of 212 members, who are elected for four years unless the Chamber is dissolved before that time has elapsed. Belgium entered 1971 with a rewritten Constitution, differing from its predecessor mainly in its treatment of the two cultural entities. From now on all Belgians will be officially recognized as either Flemings or Walloons, and each community will have regional powers in cultural and economic affairs.

ELECTORAL SYSTEM

Members must be twenty-five years of age, and they are elected by secret ballot according to the system of Proportional Representation. Suffrage is universal for citizens of twenty-one years or over. (A Bill giving all women electoral franchise was approved in March 1948.) Up to 1894 only 2 per cent of the people had the right to vote. In that year manhood suffrage at the age of twenty-five was enacted, and plural voting was established on grounds of income, marriage, and educational qualifications. In 1921 the age-limit for the male vote was reduced to twenty-one. Since 1893 voting has been compulsory, and abstentions from voting have fallen to 6 per cent.

The Senate, or Second Chamber, is chosen in the following manner. It is composed of:

(1) Half as many members as the Chamber of Representatives, elected directly by the same electors.

(2) Members chosen by the Provincial Councillors, in the proportion of one for every 200,000 population.

(3) Members co-opted by groups (1) and (2), up to half the number of group (2).

There are now 178 Senators.

All Senators must be over 40, with the exception of a small number of members of the Royal Family, who become Senators by right at the age of 18. Members are elected for four years.

THE CROWN

The King has the right to veto legislation, but he does not exercise it. His place in the Belgian Constitution is very similar to the position of the Crown in Great Britain. Though he is, according to the terms of the Constitution, supreme Head of the Executive, he in fact exercises his control through the Cabinet, which is responsible for all acts of government to the Chamber of Representatives. Though the King, according to the Constitution, appoints his own ministers, in practice, since they are responsible to the Chamber of Representatives and need its confidence, they are generally the choice of the Representatives. Similarly, the Royal initiative is in the hands of the ministry.

LEGISLATION

Legislation is introduced either by the Government or the members in the two Houses, and as the party complexion of both Houses is generally almost the same, measures passed by the Chamber of Representatives are usually passed by the Senate. Each House elects its own President at the beginning of the session, who acts as an impartial Speaker, although he is a party nominee. The Houses elect their own committees, through which all legislation passes. They are so well organized that through them the Legislature has considerable power of control over the Cabinet. Nevertheless, according to the Constitution (Art. 68) certain treaties must be communicated to the Chamber only as soon as the "interest and safety of the State permit". Further, the Government possesses an important power of dissolution which it uses: a most unusual feature is that it may be applied to either Houses separately or to both together (Art. 71).

BELGIUM—(THE CONSTITUTION, THE GOVERNMENT)

Revision of the Constitution is to be first settled by an ordinary majority vote of both Houses, specifying the article to be amended. The Houses are then automatically dissolved. The new Chambers then determine the amendments to be made, with the provision that in each House the presence of two-thirds of the members is necessary for a quorum, and a two-third majority of those voting is required.

LOCAL ADMINISTRATION

The system of local government conforms to the general European practice of being based on a combination of central officials as the executive agent and locally elected councillors as the deliberating body. The areas are the provinces and the communes, and the latter are empowered by Art. 108 of the Constitution to associate for the purposes of better government.

The French-speaking Federalist party, the Rassemblement Wallon, made significant gains in the November, 1971 elections.

BELGIUM—(JUDICIAL SYSTEM, RELIGION)

JUDICIAL SYSTEM

The independence of the judiciary is based on the constitutional division of power between the legislative, executive and judicial bodies, each of which acts independently. Judges are appointed by the Crown for life, and cannot be removed except by judicial sentence. The law of 1967, in force since 1970, unified civil procedure in the district courts, and reorganized the courts' areas of competence. Each of Belgium's nine provinces is divided into judicial districts. The judiciary is organized on four levels, from the judicial canton to the district, regional and national courts. The lowest courts are those of the Justices of the Peace, of which there are 222, and the Police Tribunals (20); each type of district court numbers 26, 1 in each canton, including the Tribunals of the First Instance, Tribunals of Commerce, and Labour Tribunals. There are 3 regional Courts of Appeal, 3 regional Labour Courts, and 1 Court of Assizes in each province. The highest courts are the 3 civil and criminal Courts of Appeal and the supreme Court of Cassation. The Military Court is in Brussels.

4000 Liège	G. VAN ZUYLEN, 25 rue de l'Evêché.
5000 Namur	A. CHARUE, 1 rue de l'Evêché.
7500 Tournai	C. HIMMER, place de l'Evêché.

THE PROTESTANT CHURCHES

Synode de l'Union de l'Eglise Evangélique Protestante de Belgique: 80 blvd. Louis Schmidt, Brussels; Pres. Rev. E. PICHAL.

The Protestant Church of Belgium: 5 rue du Champ de Mars, 1050 Brussels; Pres. Dr. A. J. PIETERS.

Mission Evangélique Belge: 7 rue du Moniteur, Brussels; f. 1918; about 2,000 mems.; Dir. B. RUSSELL JONES; publ. Belgian Beacon.

Armée du Salut (Salvation Army): Head Office: 15 rue Duquesnoy, 1000 Brussels; f. 1889; Territorial Commander L. NIJMAN; Sec.-Gen. S. VANDERKAM; publs. Cri de Guerre (French), Strijdkreet (Flemish).

THE JEWISH COMMUNITY

There are about 35,000 Jews in Belgium.

Consistoire Central Israélite de Belgique (Central Council of the Jewish Communities of Belgium): 2 rue Joseph Dupont, Brussels; Leadership M. PAUL PHILIPPSON.

THE PRESS

In pursuance of Article 18 of the Belgian Constitution: "The Press is free; no form of censorship may ever be instituted; no cautionary deposit may be demanded from writers, publishers or printers. When the author is known and is resident in Belgium, the publisher, printer or distributor may not be prosecuted."

This juridical freedom has determined the creation of newspapers and the variety of their political tendencies. It has also given them full responsibility in such matters as prices, advertisement tariffs, investment and management.

The Press legislation has its roots in the clauses of the Constitution which provide for the freedom of the Press (see Article 18 above), and for certain guarantees of procedure in case of violation of the laws governing the Press in Article 96. Many laws and decrees have been enacted in application of these principles, such as the law of October 16th, 1830 (Freedom of the Press), the decree of July 19th, 1831 (Competence and Procedure in matter of violation of the laws governing the Press), the decree of July 20th, 1831, modified by the law of April 16th, 1847 (Violation of the laws governing the Press).

There are 43 general information dailies, 29 of which are autonomous, the remainder depending largely or totally on the former (some are only, under a different title, regional editions of a larger paper).

Of the dailies, 27 are in French, 15 in Flemish and one is in German. Seven deal with economic and financial matters, and one is devoted to sport. A slight trend towards concentration showed itself in 1966 in the acquisition by Le Soir of La Meuse and La Lanterne, bringing Le Soir's group to six daily papers totalling 530,500 copies. The only other significant group consists of five Catholic papers, with 310,000 total circulation, linked with De Standaard.

Most of the important newspapers are family concerns, and family interests predominate even when newspapers have multiple ownership. Examples of family ownership of major papers are as follows: Le Soir (Rossel), Het Laatste Nieuws (Hoste), La Libre Belgique (Jourdain), La Dernière Heure (Brébart), De Standaard and De Gentenaar-Landwacht (Sap), Het Belang van Limburg (Theelen).

It should also be mentioned that Le Peuple and De Volksgazet are semi-official organs of the Belgian Socialist Party. Het Volk and La Cité are published by the Christian Workers Movement. There are few official political organs, though newspapers without any political colour are rare.

Nearly all the Belgian dailies have political leanings and are divided between the three traditional parties: Social Christian Party, Belgian Socialist Party, Freedom and Progress Party. It is not, however, possible to establish a parallel between the supporters of the parties and the readership of the dailies. For example, the readers of the Socialist newspapers are far fewer than those who vote for that party, and though Le Soir claims its neutrality with regard to the parties, it nevertheless adopts a decided viewpoint in many cases.

Although there is no easy division of the daily papers into popular and serious press, most papers attempting to provide a serious news coverage, La Libre Belgique and De Standaard stand out amongst the most influential and respected. The widest circulating dailies in French are: Le Soir (271,368) and La Libre Belgique (160,000); and in Flemish: Het Laatste Nieuws (305,940), De Standaard (287,000), Het Volk (218,000), and Gazet van Antwerpen (195,000). The major weeklies include: Ons Land (245,000),

Le Soir Illustré (80,000), and Le Patriote Illustré (51,000), the latter two associated with the dailies Le Soir and La Libre Belgique respectively; and the cultural periodicals Pourquoi Pas? (105,000) and Europe Magazine (76,000). The popular women's periodical Femmes d'Aujourd'hui (1,250,000) has the distinction of considerable sales in France. Some periodicals are printed in French and in Flemish.

INLAND WATERWAYS

Administration des Voies Hydrauliques: 155 rue de la Loi, Brussels; Dir.-Gen. F. EELEN.

Length of Inland Waterways: 1,768 km.

Under the Ten-Year Plan of Port Extension started in 1956: construction of several harbour docks in the Port of Antwerp; building of new giant lock at Port Frederic, near Antwerp, to take four 30,000-ton vessels or one 100,000-ton vessel.

Under the Investment Plan started in 1957: canals and rivers widened and deepened to allow passage of 1,350-ton barges; Meuse system down to French border widened and deepened; under a new investment plan, studies for the harbour docks on the Left Bank of the Scheldt river between Antwerp and the Holland/Belgium frontier. Modernization of the ports of Ghent and Zeebrugge. Work has started on the widening and deepening of the Albert canal to allow the passage of 10,000-ton ore convoys (pushed convoys); the building of a new giant lock in the port of Zeebrugge to take one 125,000-ton vessel has started.

Following the ratification of the Scheldt-Rhine Treaty in April, 1965, construction is to start on a new canal, about 54 miles long, between Antwerp and Dordrecht, connecting the Scheldt with the Rhine. Construction is scheduled to take 8-10 years and 92 per cent of the cost is to be borne by Belgium.

BULGARIA

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

Bulgaria, in the eastern Balkans, is bounded to the north by Romania and to the east by the Black Sea. Turkey and Greece lie to the south and Yugoslavia to the west. The climate is one of fairly sharp contrasts between winter and summer. The language is Bulgarian, a branch of the Slavonic group, written in the Cyrillic alphabet. Most people adhere to the Bulgarian Orthodox Church and there is a substantial minority of Muslims. The flag carries three horizontal stripes of white, green and red with the white uppermost; the state coat-of-arms is depicted in the left upper corner of the white stripe. The capital is Sofia.

Recent History

The Fatherland Front, a left-wing alliance formed in 1942, seized power with help from the Soviet Union in 1944 and set up a government under Kimon Georgiev. The constitutional monarchy formally ended when Bulgaria was declared a republic in 1946, and in elections soon after Georgi Dimitrov became both Prime Minister and First Secretary of the Communist Party in a government formed from members of the Communist-dominated Fatherland Front. Opposition parties were now abolished and a new constitution based on the Soviet model was adopted. On his death in 1949, Dimitrov was succeeded by Vulko Chervenkov as Prime Minister in the same year and as First Secretary in 1950. The political trials and executions which were common during this period and into the fifties became less frequent after the death of Stalin, and rehabilitation of those who had been disgraced began in 1956. Bulgaria has remained, however, a satellite under the influence of the Soviet Union.

Todor Zhivkov became First Secretary in 1953 and, following an ideological struggle within the Communist Party, succeeded Anton Yugov as Prime Minister in 1962. In 1965 a coup against the government failed. When a new constitution was adopted in May 1971, Zhivkov relinquished his position as Prime Minister to become the first Chairman of the newly formed State Council. This move is seen to strengthen his position at the head of the government. In the last decade relations with Western states have strengthened; Zhivkov made his first visit to the West in 1966 when he was welcomed in Paris by General de Gaulle. In February 1971 proposals were made to Greece for increased co-operation in economic and technical fields. Bulgaria was one of the five Warsaw Pact countries which occupied Czechoslovakia in 1968.

Government

The People's Republic of Bulgaria is a socialist state. The National Assembly is the supreme organ of State power and is elected for a term of five years. It elects the State Council from the people's representatives. The State Council of the People's Republic of Bulgaria is a supreme and permanently acting organ of State power, which is responsible for taking decisions and supervising their implementation. As a supreme organ of the National Assembly, the State Council performs a combination of legislative and executive duties. The Council of Ministers is the supreme executive and administrative organ of State power. The Bulgarian Communist Party is the leading force in the society and state.

Defence

Bulgaria is a member of the Warsaw Pact. Military service is for two years in the Army and Air Force, and three years in the Navy. The total strength of the armed forces is 148,000, comprising an Army of 117,000, Air Force 22,000 and Navy 9,000. Para-military forces number 15,000, including border troops, and there is a voluntary People's Militia of 150,000. Defence expenditure in 1970 totalled 324 million Leva.

Economic Affairs

Bulgaria is a very fertile country and since the end of the Second World War her agriculture has been thoroughly reorganized on a large-scale co-operative and mechanized basis. Further plans for reorganization into 150 huge agro-industrial complexes are in hand. Nearly 40 per cent of the population are employed on the land, and wheat, maize, beet and barley are the chief crops. Farm produce is being marketed in more than 60 countries and 55 per cent of Bulgaria's exports are agricultural, including fruit, vegetables, tomatoes and tobacco. Industry is publicly owned and output has increased by more than 12 per cent annually from 1949 to 1968. It is now in the process of being reorganized into 66 massive combines, each controlling many related enterprises. The 1971-75 Five-Year Plan envisages a 55-60 per cent increase in industrial production. Engineering, in particular, has been greatly developed, as have the chemical fertilizer and metallurgical industries. Bulgaria's first nuclear power station, now under construction by Soviet engineers, is due for completion in 1974. Coal, iron ore, copper, lead and zinc are mined and some oil is extracted on the Black Sea coast. Foreign trade is a state monopoly and 80 per cent is with the other Comecon countries, mainly the Soviet Union.

Transport and Communications

Inland transport is by rail, road and waterway. There are about 4,162 km. of railway track and 37,500 km. of roads; a major motorway is under construction from Sofia to the coast. The Danube is the main waterway, the total tonnage of vessels sailing on it exceeding 200,000 tons. External services link Black Sea ports to Russia, the Mediterranean and West Europe. Balkan, the state airline, maintains services with East European capitals and other capitals in Europe and the Middle East.

Social Welfare

State social insurance is directed by the Department of Public Insurance and the Pensions Directorate under the Ministry of Labour and Social Welfare. State insurance contributions are compulsory for all workers irrespective of the nature of their work but contribution payments, rights and benefits are scaled according to the following three categories: workers and employees, labour co-operative farmers, private craftsmen and private farmers. Insurance contributions are determined by the Council of Ministers. Depending on the category of worker, contributions are either paid by the enterprises, employers, etc., who in turn levy the employees and workers, or they are paid by the workers individually.

BULGARIA—(INTRODUCTORY SURVEY)

Insured persons are paid money compensation during the time of sick leave, the amount of compensation depending on the duration of uninterrupted years of service. Every woman who is insured is entitled to full paid leave for so many days before and after childbirth—the amount of leave allowed depending on the number of children in the family already, and the number of years the woman has been insured. In 1967 the Bulgarian government increased the size of grants paid to mothers of large families. Disability and old age pensions are paid to those who have contributed to the insurance scheme. The amount of pension will vary according to the nature of work the disabled or retired person was formerly engaged in, his length of service and his age.

Since 1951 all medical services and treatment have been free for the whole population, and these are provided for by the state medical authorities. All medical treatment establishments and medical schools, training colleges and research institutes are controlled by the Ministry of Public Health. Departments of Public Health in the Regional People's Councils actually supervise medical work together with the Bulgarian Red Cross.

Education

The Bulgarian educational system follows the Soviet system more closely than the other Eastern European countries. Much importance has been attached to the development of education in Bulgaria, with the result that considerable progress has been made in recent years. A series of educational acts were passed between the years 1944 and 1950 and these provided for expansion in the educational field. In 1959 a law was passed for the "further development of education in the Bulgarian People's Republic".

In 1970, 375,000 children between the ages of one and seven years attended non-compulsory crèches (yashli) or kindergartens (detshi gradini). Education is compulsory for children between the ages of seven and sixteen years, when they attend the elementary eight-class school (osnovno uchilishte), and are taught both general and specialized subjects. The elementary eight-class school provides the first two stages of the "eleven-year school". More than 95 per cent of all Bulgarian children continue with their education after the age of sixteen years, when education is no longer compulsory. There are three types of school in Bulgaria to which a student may progress after he has completed the basic school. The gimnazia provides a general education and completes the third stage of the "eleven-year school", the tekhnikum is a vocational school offering a general curriculum together with a course leading to vocational qualifications in various branches of industry, agriculture, etc. The third type of secondary school is the profesionalno tehnikesko uchilishte (vocational technical school), which gives theoretical knowledge on a certain vocation with practical work in the appropriate enterprises and plants and in agriculture. 77 per cent of the total number of students who have completed their education at the elementary school continue their studies at tekhnikum (technical schools) and the vocational technical schools. More than 2,300 pupils are trained at special schools for art, and 11,000 pupils attend schools where subjects are taught in foreign languages.

Higher education in Bulgaria can be divided into two main categories: Poluvisshi instituti, establishments, whose task is to train teachers for elementary schools and to train some other specialists. The course lasts two to three years. There are over 10,000 students trained in them. Visshiu-ucelni zavedeniya, which are establishments of higher education. About 90,000 students study university courses in them.

Tourism

Black Sea resorts are very popular, visitors coming from Russia and East Europe. In 1962 the Government launched a campaign to attract tourists from the West and tourism, particularly from the United Kingdom, has increased with over two million visitors in 1969, representing a 20 per cent growth rate, compared with the 8 per cent average for Europe. As part of the 1967 International Year of Tourism, Bulgaria abolished visas for all foreign citizens visiting the country for 24 hours to two months and announced that Bulgaria would dispense with visas after 1967 on a basis of reciprocity. The tourist exchange rate is 4.80 Leva to £1 sterling.

Sport

Sport receives state encouragement, football being the most popular game.

Public Holidays

1972: May 1, 2 (Labour Days), May 24 (Education Day), September 9, 10 (National Days), November 7 (October Revolution).

1973: January 1 (New Year's Day).

Weights and Measures

The Metric System is in force.

Currency and Exchange Rates

The currency unit is the Leva which is divided into 100 Stotinki.

Notes: Leva 20, 10, 5, 2, 1.

Coins: Leva 5, 2, 1; Stotinki 50, 20, 10, 5, 2, 1.

Exchange rate: 2.80 Leva = £1 sterling

1.08 Leva = $1 U.S.

THE CONSTITUTION

Bulgaria was formerly a monarchy, but on September 15th, 1946 King Simeon was deposed and Bulgaria was declared a Republic. The Constitution of 1947 was replaced by a new Constitution adopted by a referendum held on May 16th, 1971 and proclaimed by the Fifth National Assembly on May 18th. The following are its salient features:

The People's Republic of Bulgaria is a socialist state of the working people of towns and villages, headed by the working class. The Bulgarian Communist Party is the leading force in society and in the State. It guides the construction of a developed socialist society in the country in close fraternal co-operation with the Bulgarian Agrarian Union.

The State serves the people. It defends their interests and socialist acquisitions; directs the country's socio-economic development according to a plan; creates conditions for the constant improvement of the welfare, education and health services of the people, as well as for the all-round development of science and culture; ensures the free development of man, guarantees his rights and protects his dignity; organizes the defence of national independence, state sovereignty and the country's territorial integrity; develops and consolidates the friendship, co-operation and mutual assistance with the Union of the Soviet Socialist Republics and the other socialist countries; conducts a policy of peace and understanding with all countries and peoples.

In the People's Republic of Bulgaria all power comes from the people and belongs to the people. It is realized by the people through the freely elected representative organs—the National Assembly and the People's Councils—or directly. The representative organs are elected on the basis of a general, equal and direct right to vote by secret ballot.

All the citizens of the People's Republic of Bulgaria who are 18 years of age, irrespective of sex, nationality, race, religion, education, profession, official, public or property status, excluding those under restraint, are eligible to vote and to be elected.

The People's Republic of Bulgaria is governed strictly in accordance with the Constitution and the country's laws. It belongs to the world socialist community, which is one of the main conditions for its independence and all-round development.

SOCIAL-ECONOMIC ORGANIZATION

The economic system of the People's Republic of Bulgaria is socialist. It is based on public ownership of the means of production.

The forms of ownership are: state (all people's) ownership, co-operative ownership, ownership of public organizations and personal ownership.

Plants and factories, banks, underground resources, the natural sources of power, nuclear energy, forests, pasture land, roads, railway, water and air transport, posts, telegraphs, telephones, the radio and television are state (all people's) property.

Co-operative property belongs to collective bodies of working people who have united of their own free will for the joint carrying out of economic activity, to co-operative unions and inter-co-operative organizations. The State fosters and aids the activity of co-operatives and of co-operative farms.

The property of public organizations serves for achieving their goals, including the realization of the activities entrusted to them by state organs, and for meeting public interests.

The citizens of the People's Republic of Bulgaria have the right of personal ownership on real and movable property to meet personal needs and those of the family. The State protects the personal property, including savings, acquired by work or in some other lawful manner. Citizens cannot exercise their rights of personal ownership and their other property rights to the detriment of the public interest. The right to inherit is recognized and guaranteed.

The State directs the national economy and the other spheres of public life on the basis of unified plans for social-economic development.

Foreign trade is the exclusive right of the State.

Labour is a fundamental social-economic factor. The socialist principle "From everyone according to his abilities, to everyone according to his work" is applied in the People's Republic of Bulgaria. The protection of labour is dealt with by the law.

THE NATIONAL ASSEMBLY

The National Assembly is the supreme representative organ which expresses the will of the people and their sovereignty. As a supreme organ of state power it combines the legislative and executive activities of the State and exercises supreme control. The term of its mandate is 5 years. It is composed of 400 people's representatives who are elected in constituencies with an equal number of inhabitants. The people's representatives are responsible and account to their electorate. They may be recalled before the expiry of the term for which they have been elected. Their recall is effected by decision of the electorate in a manner laid down by law. It is convened to sessions by the State Council at least three times a year.

The National Assembly is the only legislative organ of the People's Republic of Bulgaria and the supreme organizer of the planned management of social development. It realizes the supreme leadership of the home and foreign policy of the State; approves and amends the Constitution; determines which questions and in what manner should be decided by referendum; passes, amends and revokes laws; passes the unified plans for the social-economic development of the country and the reports for their fulfilment and the State budget and the report of the Government for its realization the preceding year; establishes taxes and fixes their rate; grants amnesty; decides the questions of declaring war and concluding peace; appoints and relieves of his duties the Commander-in-Chief of the Armed Forces; may set up state-public organs with the status of ministries; elects and relieves of their duties the State Council, the Council of Ministers, the Supreme Court and the Chief Prosecutor of the People's Republic; passes laws, decisions, declarations and appeals.

Legislative initiative belongs to the State Council, the Council of Ministers, the permanent commissions of the National Assembly, the people's representatives, the Supreme Court and the Chief Prosecutor. The right of legislative initiative belongs also to public organizations in the person of the National Council of the Fatherland Front, the Central Council of Bulgarian Trade Unions, the Central Committee of the Dimitrov Young Communist League and the Executive Council of the Central Co-operative Council on questions referring to their activity.

BULGARIA—(THE CONSTITUTION)

THE STATE COUNCIL

The State Council of the People's Republic of Bulgaria is a supreme permanent organ of state power which unites the taking of decisions with their realization. Being a supreme organ of the National Assembly, the State Council ensures the blending of legislative with executive activities. It is responsible for all its activities and reports on them to the National Assembly. At its first session the National Assembly elects a State Council from among the people's representatives by a majority of more than half the total number of deputies.

The powers of the State Council are in force until the newly elected National Assembly elects a State Council.

The State Council realizes the general leadership of the home and foreign policy of the State. It represents the People's Republic of Bulgaria in her international relations. The President of the State Council receives the credentials and letters of recall of foreign diplomatic representatives in the country.

The State Council appoints elections for a National Assembly and for people's councils; determines the date for holding a referendum when a decision has been passed by the National Assembly that a referendum should take place on a certain question and in a certain manner; convenes the National Assembly at sessions; issues decrees and other juridical acts on the basic questions arising from the laws and the decisions of the National Assembly; issues decrees also on questions of principle; in urgent cases by decree amends or amplifies individual provisions of the laws; carries out the general guidance of the country's defence and security; appoints and relieves of their duties the members of the State Defence Committee and of the supreme commanding staff of the Armed Forces; controls the activities of the Council of Ministers and of the heads of the Ministries and of the other Departments; at the proposal of the Chairman of the Council of Ministers relieves of their duties and appoints individual members of the Council of Ministers—it is the duty of the State Council to submit this decision to be approved at the next session of the National Assembly; issues decrees and passes decisions, appeals and declarations.

THE COUNCIL OF MINISTERS

The Council of Ministers (the Government) is a supreme executive and administrative organ of the State. The Council effects its activities under the leadership and control of the National Assembly, and when the latter is not in session—under the leadership and control of the State Council.

The Council of Ministers is responsible for the conducting of the internal and external policy of the State. It exercises the right of legislative initiative and secures conditions for carrying through the rights and freedoms of citizens. It also ensures public order and the country's security. It is responsible for the general leadership of the Armed Forces and concludes international agreements. It directly guides, co-ordinates and controls the activities of the ministries and other departments. The Council organizes both the implementation of the acts of the National Assembly, and of the State Council. It guides and controls the activities of the executive committees of the people's councils. It adopts decrees, instructions and decisions.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT

The territory of the Republic is divided for administrative purposes into Municipalities and Counties, which are governed by Municipal and County People's Councils, elected by the local population for a period of two and a half years. Their function is to implement all economic, social and cultural undertakings of local significance in conformity with the laws of the country. They prepare the economic plan and budget of the Municipality and the County within the framework of the State Economic Plan and the State Budget, and direct its execution. They are responsible for the correct administration of State property and economic enterprises in their areas, and for the maintenance of law and order. These councils report at least once a year to their electors on their activities.

JUSTICE

The judicial authorities apply the law. Justice is independent and subject only to the law. Lay judges (Assessors) also take part in the dispensation of justice. Judges of all ranks and assessors are elected except in special cases fixed by law. Supreme judicial control over every kind of court is exercised by the Supreme Court of the People's Republic, which is elected by the National Assembly for a term of five years.

Citizens whose rights have been violated by government organs may appeal against such violations before higher-ranking organs and courts, in accordance with the Law of Administrative Procedure, 1970.

The Chief Prosecutor, who is also elected by the National Assembly for five years, and is answerable to it alone, has supreme supervision over the correct observance of the law by Government organs, officials, and all citizens. It is his particular duty to attend to the prosecution and punishment of crimes which are detrimental to the national and economic interests of the Republic or affect its independence.

THE RIGHTS AND DUTIES OF CITIZENS

All citizens are equal before the law. No privileges based on national origin, religion, sex or property are recognized. All preaching of racial, national or religious hatred is punishable by law.

Women have equal rights with men in all spheres, including equal pay for equal work. The State pays special attention to the needs of mothers and children. Marriage and the family are under State protection, although only civil marriage is legally valid. Children born out of wedlock have equal rights with legitimate offspring.

All citizens have the right to free medical treatment in hospitals.

Labour is recognized as the basic factor of public and economic life. All citizens have the right to work, and it is their duty to engage in socially useful labour, according to their abilities. Holidays, limited working hours, pensions and medical treatment are guaranteed.

All citizens have the right to education, which is secular and democratic. Elementary education is free and compulsory. National minorities have the right to be educated in their own tongue, and to develop their national culture, although the study of Bulgarian is compulsory.

The Church is separate from the State. Citizens have freedom of religion and conscience. However, misuse of the Church and religion for political ends and the formation of religious organizations with a political basis is prohibited.

Citizens are guaranteed freedom of speech and of the Press; secrecy of correspondence, inviolability of persons and dwellings, and the right of association and assembly, except for fascist and certain other meetings.

Military service is compulsory for all male citizens.

THE PRESS

As in most Communist countries, the press in Bulgaria is considered a powerful instrument of the Party and part of the educational system, and for that reason it is subject to strict control by the Government. Its structure closely resembles that of the Soviet press, being dominated by the Communist Party and by organizations attached to the Fatherland Front, and much of its news originates from TASS, the Soviet news agency. Censorship is not usually necessary, since editors are Party members and aware of their responsibility to the Government.

The style of the Bulgarian press is serious and articles continually defend the Communist system. However, advertising is on the increase with the realization of its usefulness in the economy, and newspapers are beginning to take on a western appearance. Most publications enjoy a steady increase in circulation.

A total of 715 newspapers of varying frequency is published in Bulgaria; there are seventeen daily papers in Bulgaria, eight of which are published in Sofia, and their total circulation is 5,496,670 copies. Most of them are usually made up of four pages. The most important is Rabotnichesko Delo (circ. 650,000), the organ of the Communist Party. Other important newspapers are Otechestven Front (circ. 247,000), the Fatherland Front daily, and Narodna Mladezh (circ. 225,000), the youth newspaper. These dailies set the tone of the rest of the press.

There are 737 magazines and periodicals published in Bulgaria with a total circulation of 37,179,000 copies; they cater for almost every possible interest and are extremely popular. Several magazines are also published in foreign languages for export.

A heterogeneous swimming-pool reactor, with a thermal capacity of 1,500 kW, came into operation near Sofia in 1961. The reactor, supplied under a bilateral agreement by the U.S.S.R. is used for the production of radioactive isotopes as well as for experimental work.

Bulgaria's first nuclear power station, now under construction at Kozlodouzi by Soviet engineers, is due for completion in 1974. Its ultimate capacity will be 880 MW.

CYPRUS

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Republic of Cyprus is an island in the eastern Mediterranean about 60 miles south of Turkey. It is the third largest Mediterranean island after Sicily and Sardinia. Climate is mild though snow falls in the mountainous south-west between December and March. About four-fifths of the people speak modern Greek and the remainder Turkish. The Greek-speaking community adhere to the Greek Orthodox Church while most of the Turks are Muslims. The flag is white with a map of Cyprus in gold in the centre garlanded by olive leaves. The capital is Nicosia.

Recent History

Cyprus was created a British Crown Colony in 1925. In 1955 Greek-Cypriot nationalists seeking independence and unification with Greece resisted British rule by force. The civil war ended in 1959, and Cyprus became an independent republic in August 1960, Archbishop Makarios having been elected the first President. Unification with Greece and the Turkish-Cypriot demand for partition were both rejected. Britain remained in certain agreed areas to be used as military bases. Cyprus was admitted to the United Nations in 1960 and joined the Commonwealth in 1961. However, serious fighting broke out between Greek and Turkish Cypriots in late 1963, and in April 1964 a United Nations Peace-Keeping Force was set up and a UN Mediator appointed. Since this time, the situation has improved, with serious incidents becoming only occasional. Such incidents have included the attempted assassination of President Makarios in March 1970, and the murder, in the same month, of a former Minister of the Interior, Mr. Georgiadis.

Talks aimed at reaching agreement on a new constitutional framework have been going on since June 1968, but although these seem to have the effect of preventing further crises and of creating conditions under which the economy has flourished, hopes of a settlement acceptable to both Greek and Turkish communities are not great. In December 1971, the United Nations extended the mandate of its Peace-Keeping Force for the twentieth six-month period, expressing the hope that "by then sufficient progress towards a final solution will make possible a withdrawal or substantial reduction of the force." The import of large quantities of arms from Czechoslovakia early in 1972 prompted pressure from Greece for a peaceful settlement, but President Makarios again asserted his opposition to attempts to impose a solution upon Cyprus.

The fifteen Turkish members of the House of Representatives have not attended sessions since January 1964, and in their absence a number of measures have been passed which, without amending the Constitution, make temporary provisions for the administration of the country (see below, Constitution).

Government

According to the Constitution, legislative authority is vested in a House of Representatives elected by adult universal suffrage for a five-year term and consisting of 35 members from the Greek community and 15 from the Turkish community. The House exercises authority on all matters save those reserved for the Communal Chambers. These bodies, elected by both communities, deal with communal affairs such as religion, teaching and culture. Executive authority is vested in the President who is Greek-speaking and is assisted by a Council of Ministers composed of seven Greek and three Turkish members.

Note: Turkish participation in government and legislation was withdrawn in January 1964, after which the post of Vice-President, who was from the Turkish community was abolished. In March 1965 the Greek Communal Chamber was abolished and its functions taken over by the Ministry of Education. In June 1966, all Turkish judges resigned.

Defence

The National Guard has been increasingly modernized in training and equipment since its foundation in 1964. National Service is compulsory, the term of conscription has been increased from six months to two years, and all males between the ages of eighteen and fifty are liable. In addition to the Cyprus Police Force, which maintains law and order, the two communities both keep local defence forces from their "mother" countries—950 from Greece and 650 from Turkey. The United Kingdom maintains military bases at Akrotiri and Dhekelia.

Economic Affairs

The economy is based mainly on agriculture. Principal crops are wheat, barley, vegetables and citrus fruits. Vines are cultivated and wine produced. Mining provides two-thirds of the island's exports. The most important minerals are cupreous and iron pyrites, asbestos, copper and gypsum. There is no heavy industry and manufactures are limited to food processing, textiles and woodworking. In 1966 a refinery was opened near Larnaca by a consortium of Shell, Mobil and B.P. The Greek community is responsible for 90 per cent of business in Cyprus, and despite the internal troubles, the economy has remained remarkably strong. Since 1968, Cyprus has achieved exceptional economic growth, averaging over 8 per cent each year; in 1970 the Gross National Product per capita reached £355.8. Although exports do not usually amount to more than half the total of imports, the balance of payments is maintained in credit by the inflow of foreign military expenditure (from the British bases) and of Turkish financial support for its community. The United Kingdom takes 76 per cent of the island's exports, and since the former's entry into the European Economic Community might adversely affect this position, Cyprus is now negotiating for associate membership of the Community.

Transport and Communications

There are no railways in Cyprus. Towns and villages are linked by asphalted roads with frequent bus services. The three main ports are Famagusta, Limassol and Larnaca which provide cargo and passenger services to Greek and other Mediterranean ports. There is an international airport at Nicosia.

Social Welfare

Since the foundation of the Republic a comprehensive social insurance scheme covering every working male and female and their dependants has been established. It embraces protection against arbitrary and unjustified dismissal, industrial welfare, and tripartite co-operation in the formulation and implementation of labour policies and objectives. A second five-year plan for economic and social development was introduced in 1967. Benefits and pensions from the social insurance scheme cover unemployment, sickness, maternity, widows, orphans, old age and death.

Education

The educational system in Cyprus is centralized under the authority of the Ministry of Education. A six-year course of elementary education, starting usually at the age of six is compulsory for all children. There is a Six Year Elementary School in every community, supplemented in some areas by Lower Mixed Schools (infant) and Eight Grade Schools. About 75 per cent of all pupils progress after examination to the non-obligatory Gymnasias (secondary schools), which normally demand fees. Three years at a Lower Secondary School gives a general practical education, and a further three years of Senior Secondary School allows for specialization in classical, scientific, and commercial directions. There are also technical, vocational, and agricultural schools. A certain number of scholarships are granted by the Ministry of Education for secondary education.

Schools are divided into Greek and Turkish. In 1971 there were 556 Greek elementary schools, 73 secondary, 10 technical and vocational (including a forestry college and a school of nursing and midwifery) and a teacher training college. Figures for all establishments give an average ratio of about 1 teacher to every 28 pupils. The Turkish Education Office caters for the Turkish-speaking population and administers 10 kindergartens, 227 elementary schools, 15 junior secondary schools, 5 lycées, 4 technical schools, and 1 teacher training college.

Tourism

Tourism is experiencing a considerable but carefully planned development in Cyprus. There are many beaches providing excellent sea bathing during the long, dry summer and skiing is possible in the mountains during winter. In Famagusta, particularly, there are many new hotels, although elsewhere building is controlled. In 1970, an estimated 160,000 tourists visited Cyprus, and this total could rise to 400,000 by the mid-1970s.

Visas are not required for nationals of the following countries: Belgium, Denmark, Finland, France, Federal Republic of Germany, Greece, Iceland, Ireland, Italy, Liechtenstein, Luxembourg, The Netherlands, Norway, San Marino, Sweden, Switzerland, United Kingdom and British Commonwealth, U.S.A.

Sport

Football, hockey, gymnastics and athletics are the most popular sports.

Public Holidays

1972: April 7, 8, 10 (Greek Orthodox Easter), May 1 (Labour Day), October 1, October 26 ("Ohi" Day), December 25, 26 (Christmas).

1973: January 1 (New Year's Day), January 6 (Epiphany), January 19 (President's Name Day), March 12 (Lent Monday), March 25 (Greek Independence Day).

Weights and Measures

Weights and measures follow the standard British weights and measures (see under United Kingdom). The Metric System is also in use, as well as a special internal system as follows:

1 pic = $\frac{1}{4}$ yard; 1 oke = 2.8 pounds; 1 kilé = 8 Imperial gallons.

Currency and Exchange Rates

The monetary unit is the Cyprus Pound which is divided into 1,000 mils.

Notes: £5, £1, 500 mils, 250 mils.

Coins: Mils 100, 50, 25, 5, 3.

Exchange rate: £1 Cyprus = £1 sterling
385 mils = $1 U.S.

THE CONSTITUTION

SUMMARY

The Constitution entered into force on August 16th, 1960, on which date Cyprus became an Independent Republic. In March, 1961 Cyprus was accepted as a member of the Commonwealth.

ARTICLE I

The State of Cyprus is an independent and sovereign Republic with a presidential régime, the President being Greek and the Vice-President being Turkish, elected by the Greek and the Turkish Communities of Cyprus respectively as hereinafter in this Constitution provided.

ARTICLES 2-5

The Greek Community comprises all citizens of the Republic who are of Greek origin and whose mother tongue is Greek or who share the Greek cultural traditions or who are members of the Greek Orthodox Church.

The Turkish Community comprises all citizens of the Republic who are of Turkish origin and whose mother tongue is Turkish or who share the Turkish cultural traditions or who are Moslems.

Citizens of the Republic who do not come within the above provisions shall, within three months of the date of the coming into operation of this Constitution, opt to belong to either the Greek or the Turkish Community as individuals, but, if they belong to a religious group, shall opt as a religious group and upon such option they shall be deemed to be members of such Community.

The official languages of the Republic are Greek and Turkish.

The Republic shall have its own flag of neutral design and colour, chosen jointly by the President and the Vice-President of the Republic.

The Greek and the Turkish Communities shall have the right to celebrate respectively the Greek and the Turkish national holidays.

ARTICLES 6-35

Fundamental Rights and Liberties

ARTICLES 36-53

President and Vice-President

The President of the Republic as Head of the State represents the Republic in all its official functions; signs the credentials of diplomatic envoys and receives the credentials of foreign diplomatic envoys; signs the credentials of delegates for the negotiation of international treaties, conventions or other agreements; signs the letter relating to the transmission of the instruments of ratification of any international treaties, conventions or agreements; confers the honours of the Republic.

The Vice-President of the Republic as Vice-Head of the State has the right to be present at all official functions; at the presentation of the credentials of foreign diplomatic envoys; to recommend to the President the conferment of honours on members of the Turkish Community which recommendation the President shall accept unless there are grave reasons to the contrary. The honours so conferred will be presented to the recipient by the Vice-President if he so desires.

The election of the President and the Vice-President of the Republic shall be direct, by universal suffrage and secret ballot, and shall, except in the case of a by-election, take place on the same day but separately.

The office of the President and of the Vice-President shall be incompatible with that of a Minister or of a Representative or of a member of a Communal Chamber or of a member of any municipal council including a Mayor or of a member of the armed or security forces of the Republic or with a public or municipal office.

The President and Vice-President of the Republic are invested by the House of Representatives.

The President and the Vice-President shall hold office for a period of five years.

The Executive power is ensured by the President and the Vice-President of the Republic.

The President and the Vice-President of the Republic in order to ensure the executive power shall have a Council of Ministers composed of seven Greek Ministers and three Turkish Ministers. The Ministers shall be designated respectively by the President and the Vice-President of the Republic who shall appoint them by an instrument signed by them both.

The decisions of the Council of Ministers shall be taken by an absolute majority and shall, unless the right of final veto or return is exercised by the President or the Vice-President of the Republic or both, be promulgated immediately by them.

The executive power exercised by the President and the Vice-President of the Republic conjointly consists of:

- Determining the design and colour of the flag.
- Creation or establishment of honours.
- Appointment of the members of the Council of Ministers.
- Promulgation by publication of the decisions of the Council of Ministers.
- Promulgation by publication of any law or decision passed by the House of Representatives.
- Appointments and termination of appointments as in Articles provided.
- Institution of compulsory military service.
- Reduction or increase of the security forces.
- Exercise of the prerogative of mercy in capital cases.
- Remission, suspension and commutation of sentences.
- Right of references to the Supreme Constitutional Court and publication of Court decisions.
- Address of messages to the House of Representatives.

The executive power exercised by the President consists of:

- Designation and termination of appointment of Greek Ministers.
- Convening and presiding of the meetings of the Council of Ministers.
- Right of final veto on Council decisions and on laws or decisions of the House of Representatives concerning foreign affairs, defence or security.
- Right of recourse to the Supreme Constitutional Court.
- Publication of the communal laws and decisions of the Greek Communal Chamber.
- Prerogative of mercy in capital cases.
- Addressing messages to the House of Representatives.

The executive power exercised by the Vice-President consists of:

- Designation and termination of appointment of Turkish Ministers.
- Asking the President for the convening of the Council of Ministers and being present and taking part in the discussions.
- Right of final veto on Council decisions and on laws or decisions of the House of Representatives concerning foreign affairs, defence or security.
- Right of recourse to the Supreme Constitutional Court.
- Publication of the communal laws and decisions of the Turkish Communal Chamber.
- Prerogative of mercy in capital cases.
- Addressing messages to the House of Representatives.

ARTICLES 54-60

Council of Ministers

The Council of Ministers shall exercise executive power in all matters, other than those which are within the competence of a Communal Chamber, including the following:

- General direction and control of the government of the Republic and the direction of general policy.
- Foreign affairs, defence and security.
- Co-ordination and supervision of all public services.
- Supervision and disposition of property belonging to the Republic.
- Consideration of Bills to be introduced to the House of Representatives by a Minister.
- Making of any order or regulation for the carrying into effect of any law as provided by such law.
- Consideration of the Budget of the Republic to be introduced to the House of Representatives.

ARTICLES 61-85

House of Representatives

The legislative power of the Republic shall be exercised by the House of Representatives in all matters except those expressly reserved to the Communal Chambers.

The number of Representatives shall be fifty:

Provided that such number may be altered by a resolution of the House of Representatives carried by a majority comprising two-thirds of the Representatives elected by the Greek Community and two-thirds of the Representatives elected by the Turkish Community.

Out of the number of Representatives 70 per cent shall be elected by the Greek Community and 30 per cent by the Turkish Community separately from amongst their members respectively, and, in the case of a contested election, by universal suffrage and by direct and secret ballot held on the same day.

The term of office of the House of Representatives shall be for a period of five years.

The President of the House of Representatives shall be a Greek, and shall be elected by the Representatives elected by the Greek Community, and the Vice-President shall be a Turk and shall be elected by the Representatives elected by the Turkish Community.

ARTICLES 86-111

Communal Chambers

The Greek and the Turkish Communities respectively shall elect from amongst their own members a Communal Chamber.

The Communal Chambers shall, in relation to their respective Community, have competence to exercise legislative power solely with regard to the following:

- All religious, educational, cultural and teaching matters.
- Personal status; composition and instances of courts dealing with civil disputes relating to personal status and to religious matters.
- Imposition of personal taxes and fees on members of their respective Community in order to provide for their respective needs.

ARTICLES 112-121, 126-128

Officers of the Republic

ARTICLES 122-125

The Public Service

The public service shall be composed as to 70 per cent of Greeks and as to 30 per cent of Turks.

ARTICLES 129-132

The Forces of the Republic

The Republic shall have an army of two thousand men of whom 60 per cent shall be Greeks and 40 per cent shall be Turks.

The security forces of the Republic shall consist of the police and gendarmerie and shall have a contingent of two thousand men. The forces shall be composed as to 70 per cent of Greeks and as to 30 per cent of Turks.

Senior Judge of Judge's Court: J. P. MURPHY.

Under the Cyprus Act 1960, the United Kingdom retained sovereignty in two sovereign base areas and this was recognized in the Treaty of Establishment signed between the U.K., Greece, Turkey and the Republic of Cyprus in August, 1960. The base areas cover 99 square miles. The Treaty also conferred on Britain certain rights within the Republic, including rights of movement and the use of specified training areas.

UNITED NATIONS PEACE-KEEPING FORCE IN CYPRUS

UNFICYP

P.O. Box 1642, Nicosia, Cyprus

Set up for three months in March 1964 (subsequently extended at intervals of three or six months) to keep the peace between the Greek and Turkish communities and help to solve outstanding issues between them.

Commander: Maj.-Gen. D. PREM CHAND.

Special Representative of the UN Secretary-General: Dr. BIBIANO OSORIO-TAFALL (Mexico).

JUDICIAL SYSTEM

Supreme Court: Nicosia.

President: Hon. Mr. Justice M. TRIANTAFYLIDIS.

Judges: Hon. Mr. Justice A. S. STAVRINIDES, Hon. Mr. Justice L. N. LOIZOU, Hon. Mr. Justice T. HADJIAN-ASTASSIOU, Hon. Mr. Justice A. N. LOIZOU, Hon. Mr. Justice Y. CH. MALACHTOS.

The Supreme Court is the final appellate court in the Republic and the final adjudicator in matters of constitutional and administrative law, including recourses on conflict of competence between state organs on questions of the constitutionality of laws, etc. It deals with appeals from Assize Courts and District Courts as well as from the decisions of its own single judges when exercising original jurisdiction in certain matters such as prerogative orders of habeas corpus, mandamus, certiorari, etc., and in admiralty and certain matrimonial causes.

Assize Courts and District Courts:

As required by the Constitution a law was passed in 1960 providing for the establishment, jurisdiction and powers of courts of civil and criminal jurisdiction, i.e. of six District Courts and six Assize Courts.

Ecclesiastical and Communal Courts:

There are seven Orthodox Church tribunals having exclusive jurisdiction in matrimonial causes between members of the Greek Orthodox Church. Appeals go from these tribunals to the appellate tribunal of the Church.

Civil disputes relating to personal status of members of the Turkish Community are dealt with by two Communal Courts. There is also a communal appellate court to which appeals may be made from the decisions of the courts of first instance.

Supreme Council of Judicature: Nicosia.

The Supreme Council of Judicature is composed of the Attorney-General, the President and the two senior Judges of the Supreme Court, the senior District Court President, the senior District Court Judge and a practising advocate of at least twelve years practice.

It is responsible for the appointment, promotion, transfer, etc., of the judges exercising civil and criminal jurisdiction in the District Courts and the Assize Courts.

RELIGION

Greeks form 80 per cent of the population and most of them belong to the Orthodox Church. Most Turks (18 per cent of the population) are Muslims.

Greek Orthodox	449,000
Muslims (Turks)	104,000
Armenian Apostolic	3,500
Maronite	3,000
Anglican
Roman Catholic	18,000
Other

The Orthodox Church of Cyprus: Archbishopric of Cyprus, P.O. Box 1130, Nicosia; f. 45 A.D.; the Autocephalous Orthodox Church of Cyprus, a part of the Eastern Orthodox Church, enjoys the privilege of independence with the right to elect its own Archbishop. 500,000 members.

Metropolitan of Kition: Bishop ANTHIMOS.

Metropolitan of Kyrenia: Bishop KYPRIANOS.

Suffragan Bishop of Constantia: Bishop CHRYSOSTOMOS

Suffragan Bishop of Amathus: Bishop KALLINIKOS.

Islam: Most of the adherents in Cyprus are Sunnis of the Hanafi Sect. The religious head of the Muslim community is the Mufti.

The Mufti of Cyprus: Dr. R. M. RIJAT.

Other Churches: Armenian Apostolic, Catholic (Maronite Rite), Roman Catholic and Church of England.

THE PRESS

The establishment and general running of newspapers and periodicals is defined in the Press law, consisting of Chapter 79 of the pre-independence Code of Law, later amended by Law 69 in 1965. Article 19 of the Constitution declares in connection with the rights of the Press: "Every person has the right to freedom of speech and expression in any form. This right includes freedom to hold opinions and impart information and ideas without interference by any public authority and regardless of frontiers." This freedom is subject to legally specified conditions and restrictions in the interest of state security, public safety, order, public health and morals, the protection of the reputation and the rights of others and the preservation of the authority and impartiality of the judiciary.

Cyprus has a small but vigorous Press, catering for all political viewpoints in the twofold community, and constituting the most influential of the communications media. Most newspapers are owned by private individuals but Patris is owned by a limited company. Although several dailies have a clear political leaning, and Haravghi is affiliated to AKEL, the Communist Party, none is directly owned by a political party.

Of the fourteen dailies, nine are in Greek, four in Turkish and one in English. This paper, the Cyprus Mail, appears each day, but all the Greek and some of the Turkish dailies do not publish a Monday edition, when most of the weekly papers appear.

Phileleftheros, Agon and Makhi (linked with the weekly Tharros) tend to be pro-government; while Haravghi (associated with the weekly Nei Keri) reflects the views of the extreme left, and Patris those of the political right. The moderate-liberal Eleftheria, a paper of some prestige, is politically independent, like the Cyprus Mail. Bozkurt and Halkin Sesi are the chief spokesmen for the Turkish community. Eleftheria, Phileleftheros and the Cyprus Mail are the dailies most respected for their serious news coverage. Makhi and Haravghi are also very influential, as they are the most widely read, with circulations of over ten thousand. Though low by West European standards this figure is high in comparison with Middle Eastern circulation figures. Precise, reliable circulation figures are virtually unobtainable.

Among the most respected weekly newspapers are the moderate Kypros and Alithia, though Tharros and Nei Keri are very popular. There are also a number of trade union papers, headed by Ergatiho Vima, the organ of the Pan-Cyprian Federation of Labour.

TRADE FAIR

Cyprus International Trade Fair: P.O.B. 1094, Nicosia annually in September.

TRANSPORT

RAILWAYS

There are no railways in Cyprus.

ROADS

There are about 4,791 miles of roads, of which over 2,123 miles have been asphalted. There is an extensive network of bus services between Nicosia and the major towns and most villages, and between district centres and villages in each area. There are also taxi services between the principal towns.

SHIPPING

Famagusta is the main port of the island and has a natural harbour; vessels of an overall length of 430 feet and a maximum draught of 22 feet can be accommodated alongside the quay in the inner harbour; ships with a maximum draught of 30 ft. can be accommodated in the outer harbour. There is open-roadstead accommodation at Larnaca and Limassol. The harbours of Paphos and Kyrenia offer good anchorage to small vessels and fishing craft. There is very little coastal shipping.

Most of the island's oil passes through Larnaca, although large quantities are discharged at Dhekelia, Vassiliko, Moni and Akrotiri for use in power stations and cement factories. Minerals are exported mainly through Vassiliko, Limni, Xeros and Karavostasi.

There are over sixty lines running cargo and passenger services to Cyprus at approximately weekly, bi-monthly and monthly intervals.

CIVIL AVIATION

The airport at Nicosia has a main runway of 8,000 ft. which is suitable for all types of aircraft, including jets, and work on an extension to 9,700 ft. started in 1970; there is a secondary runway of 6,000 ft.; new terminal buildings costing £1.1 million (including £500,000 from a British Government grant) were opened by President Makarios in March 1968.

Cyprus Airways: Head Office: 16 Byron Avenue, P.O.B. 1903, Nicosia; f. 1946; Chair. G. ELIADES; Gen. Man. E. SAVVA; routes to Ankara, Istanbul, Tel-Aviv, Cairo, Rhodes and Beirut; fleet of two Trident 2E; routes to Athens, Ankara, Istanbul, Tel-Aviv, Cairo, London, Frankfurt and Beirut.

Cyprus is also served by the following foreign airlines: Aeroflot, Alia (Jordan), Alitalia, AUA, Balkan, B.E.A., B.O.A.C., C.S.A., Egyptair, El Al, Interflug, K.L.M., L.O.T., MALEV, M.E.A., Olympic, T.H.Y. and Zambia Airways.

TOURISM

Since earliest times Cyprus has been at a crossroads between east and west, lying on the main trade routes of the Mediterranean and therefore of strategic importance. As a result of the commercial and military interest shown by neighbouring peoples over the centuries Cyprus has gained a wide cultural background which is now one of its chief assets as a tourist centre.

There was a flourishing civilization in neolithic times, already showing contact with neighbouring countries, and during the early Bronze Age, 2300-1900 B.C., relations with the Near East were both cultural and commercial. By the Middle Bronze Age, 1900-1550 B.C., contact with other cultures had become so varied that Cypriot art began to lose its own individual characteristics. The first Greeks came to the island in the Late Bronze Age, 1500-1050 B.C., first as traders, then as colonizers; it was they who laid the basis of modern Cyprus, introducing their architecture and town planning, language, writing, religion, political institutions, art, customs, etc. The mingling of styles evolved into what is known as the Levant Mycenaean. Later Cyprus came under Ptolemy's rule, and then became part of the Roman Empire; not much trace remains of the former influence, but many examples of architecture, sculpture, ceramics, etc., survive from the Graeco-Roman period, notably the ruins of Salamis; which include an amphitheatre. Severe earthquakes destroyed the principal centres of civilization in the fourth century A.D.

The influence of Byzantium was strong and some fragments remain of the great basilicas erected from the fourth century onwards. Arab invasions from the seventh to the tenth centuries caused much destruction, but the inhabitants were not driven from the island and it later became a refuge for various minority groups.

Perhaps the main sources of historical interest in Cyprus are the churches, in the Byzantine style, ornamented sometimes by classical frescoes (twelfth century), sometimes by ikons, and influenced by the French Gothic (fourteenth to fifteenth centuries). The three centuries covered by the reigns of the Princes of Lusignan gave rise to some outstanding examples of architecture, such as the Abbey at Bellapais (fourteenth century). Byzantine creative activity virtually came to an end with the Turkish occupation of the island (1570), with only ikon painting surviving until the eighteenth century; the Turks, however, adapted some existing buildings to their own use, such as the cathedral, built mainly to French designs about 1250, which was Nicosia's principal church until the Turks converted it into a mosque in 1570. There was quite considerable intermingling between the Muslim minority and the Greek majority, with many Christians converting to Islam during the Turkish sovereignty, mainly for commercial reasons; this intermingling lasted until the nineteenth century. Little has survived of early private building in Cyprus, but the churches, particularly in the Gothic style, are some of the finest in the world, and there are many notable castles and mosques. The successive invasions of Cyprus can be seen in the castle at Kyrenia, which has a Byzantine core, surrounded by a set of ramparts built by the Crusaders (c. 1190) and a further set erected by the Venetians (c. 1490).

Handicrafts in Cyprus have always displayed a good sense of design—spinning and weaving, embroidery and lacemaking, pottery (all still flourishing) and sculpture in wood and silver and gold work (no longer practised). Poetry has a long tradition dating back at least to the time of Homer: Stassinus, reputed to be Homer's father-in-law, wrote the "Cypriot epics", an introduction to the Iliad. Further intellectual flowerings came in the fourth century B.C. and the early Christian period.

CZECHOSLOVAKIA

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Czechoslovak Socialist Republic lies in Central Europe between 48°-51° N latitude and 12°-23° E longitude. Its neighbours are Poland to the north, the German Democratic Republic to the north-west, the German Federal Republic in the west, Austria to the south-west, Hungary to the south-east and the U.S.S.R. in the extreme east. The state is composed of two main population groups, the Czechs (65.1 per cent of the total population) and the Slovaks (28.9 per cent). The climate is continental with warm summers and cold winters, average mean temperature 9°C (49°F). The official languages, which are mutually understandable, are Czech and Slovak, members of the west Slavonic group. About 70 per cent of the people are Roman Catholics, 15 per cent Protestants and the remainder unstated. The flag is divided horizontally red and white with a blue triangle superimposed. The capital is Prague.

Recent History

The 1946 post-war elections returned the Communists as the strongest single party, and their leader, Klement Gottwald, became Prime Minister. When, in 1948, they assumed full power, Gottwald replaced Edvard Beneš as President, a position he held until his death in 1953. The country aligned itself with the Soviet-led East European bloc, joining Comecon (CMEA) and the Warsaw Pact. Under Gottwald, government followed a rigid Stalinist pattern, and in the early fifties there were many political trials. Although these died out under Gottwald's successors, Antonín Zápotocký and, from 1956, Antonín Novotný, de-Stalinization was late in coming to Czechoslovakia, and no relaxation was felt until 1963, when a new government under Josef Lenárt was formed. Economic and political reforms came slowly until in January 1968 Alexander Dubček took over from Novotný as Party Secretary and in April Ludvík Svoboda succeeded him as President. The policies of the new government expressed a spirit of independence and liberalism, and envisaged widespread reforms. These were seen by other members of the East European bloc as endangering their unity, and on August 21st, 1968, Warsaw Pact forces occupied Prague and other major cities. The Soviet Government afterwards exerted heavy pressure on Czech leaders to suppress their reformist policies, and in April 1969 Dubček was replaced by Dr. Gustáv Husák as First Secretary of the Communist Party. Although Dr. Husák has resisted some pressure for stricter control and political trials, there has since been a severe purge of Communist Party membership, and most of Dubček's supporters have been removed from the government. The first elections since 1964 were held in November 1971 and showed a 99.81 per cent vote in favour of National Front candidates.

Government

Czechoslovakia is a federal state of two nations of equal rights, the Czechs and the Slovaks, and composed of two republics each having its own government. The supreme organ of state power is the Federal Assembly, elected for a five-year term by all citizens over the age of 18, and having two chambers, the House of the People and the House of the Nations. Membership of the former is proportional to the population of the Republic—there are 138 Czechs and 62 Slovaks; the House of Nations has 150 members, 75 from each of the republics. The Federal Assembly elects the President for a five-year term of office, and he, in turn, appoints the Federal Government, the supreme executive organ of state power. Each of the republics has its own government, responsible for all matters except Foreign Affairs and National Defence, and its own national council.

Defence

Czechoslovakia is a member of the Eastern European Mutual Assistance Treaty, the "Warsaw Pact". Military service is compulsory and lasts for two years in the Army and slightly longer in the Air Force. Service with the reserve lasts until the age of fifty years. The Army numbers 145,000 and the Air Force 40,000; border troops number 35,000. It is planned to increase the strength of the People's Militia, now at 120,000, to 250,000. Defence expenditure in 1970 totalled 15,000 million Kčs. As a result of the invasion of 1968, Soviet forces have taken up permanent positions on the frontier with Federal Germany.

Economic Affairs

Although Czechoslovakia depends on the U.S.S.R. for many raw materials, it is a highly industrialized country. The industrial sector employs 34 per cent of the population and produces about 65 per cent of the national income. Industry is state-owned. Until 1961, heavy industry and engineering received precedence, but under the third Five-Year Plan (1961-65), greater stress was laid on light industry. The fourth Five-Year Plan (1966-70) aimed to develop the power and chemical industries, modernize machinery building and improve consumer services. During this period, both national income and industrial output rose by 39 per cent, and despite difficult circumstances and certain political unrest, the planned targets for industry were reported to have been exceeded. It was under this plan that the radical reforms of Dr. Ota Šik, then Deputy Prime Minister, were proposed, including the decentralization of industry, autonomy for individual state enterprises, and the acceptance of Western capital for joint ventures. These plans were shelved, and a return to strong central management of the economy came in 1969. Czechoslovakia is an important engineering nation with a considerable output of motor cars and cycles. Other important industries are glass, beer, ceramics and textiles.

Agriculture has been collectivized and about 90 per cent of the land is under agricultural co-operatives, state farms or communal enterprises. It has become an important stabilizing factor in the economy. During the period

CZECHOSLOVAKIA—(INTRODUCTORY SURVEY)

1966-70, its production increased by 19 per cent. Important crops are wheat, barley, potatoes and sugar beet.

The fifth Five-Year Plan (1971-75) envisages a growth rate in the national income of 5 per cent a year, calling for a considerable increase in productivity and the more efficient use of resources. With heavy industry still the mainstay of economic advance and priority given to the chemical and petrochemical industries, industrial output is planned to grow by about 35 per cent, while agriculture is expected to produce 14 per cent more.

Czechoslovakia is a member of the Council for Mutual Economic Assistance (Comecon), and a large proportion of its trade is with the countries of Eastern Europe, particularly the Soviet Union. However, there is considerable trade with West European countries, notably Federal Germany, Austria and the United Kingdom. Principal exports include machinery and equipment, chemicals and fuels, and glass and other manufactured goods.

Transport and Communications

About 60 per cent of all freight traffic is carried by the railways which have a total length of 8,250 miles, 1,484 of which are electrified. Roads carry about 70 per cent of the passenger transport. The Elbe and Danube are navigable and Czechoslovakia's overseas trade passes through East German, Polish and Black Sea ports. Civil aviation is important and there are about 60 regular internal services.

Social Welfare

A single and universal system of social security was established in Czechoslovakia after the Second World War. In 1948 a law was passed by which all workers and employees, irrespective of the nature of their work, benefited equally from the new insurance scheme. In 1966 the general protection of health was provided for by law, with particular emphasis on the prevention of illness rather than treatment and cure. Medical care, treatment, medicines, etc. are free for the entire Czechoslovak population. The National Health Insurance Scheme is administered by the Revolutionary Trade Union Movement, which also supervises other aspects of social welfare such as protection of the individual at work, housing conditions and recreation schemes. Since 1956 sickness benefit has been paid to all those workers who are temporarily unable to work due to illness, injury, medical treatment; etc. Sickness benefit may be paid for a maximum period of two years after which time disablement pension applies. Social security is guaranteed for all through different schemes: for wage-earners, members of co-operative societies, members of agricultural co-operatives, pensioners and members of the armed forces. Benefits and rights are the same for all these groups. Great importance is attached today to maternity benefits and family allowances, which are paid according to the situation of the woman and family concerned. It is hoped that in the near future these allowances will be increased to help large families with low incomes. Plans are being made to help old people by increasing old-age pensions.

Education

Plans for the expansion of the Czechoslovak educational system were launched in 1960. Emphasis has since been laid on the lengthening of the basic school, expansion of vocational and technical education, and extra educational facilities for adults. Children between the ages of three and six years attend kindergarten (mateřská škola). This form of primary education has proved very popular in recent years and it is hoped that in the near future all children may be assured a place at kindergarten. Education is compulsory between the ages of six and fifteen years, when children attend the basic school (základní devítiletá škola). There are 10,831 basic schools with 1,966,448 pupils in attendance (1970-71). At first a general curriculum is provided, followed by more specialized subjects. Owing to lack of classroom space, the basic school suffers from overcrowding and many children in the larger towns and cities are forced to attend lessons in shifts.

The secondary school system in Czechoslovakia is similar to those of other countries in Eastern Europe. The vast majority of Czechoslovak children continue their education in some form or other after the compulsory basic school. The general secondary school (střední všeobecně vzdělávací škola), provides three-year courses in either mathematics and science, or languages and the social sciences. Vocational secondary schools (střední odborná škola), as their name suggests, provide a general education together with vocational training. The apprentice school (učňovská škola) trains the student to enter a trade in industry, agriculture, etc., straight from school. Within the higher educational system there are 706 technical and teacher training colleges with 286,407 students, 37 higher institutes including 6 universities with 131,099 students. In 1959 a new type of school was set up, the střední škola pro pracující. This school is attended by workers and adults and in most cases is actually run by industrial plants for their employees. They are immensely popular and have attracted far greater numbers than was originally anticipated.

Tourism

Czechoslovakia has magnificent scenery, with winter sports facilities. Prague is the best known of the historic cities and there are famous castles and cathedrals, numerous resorts and 29 spas with natural mineral springs, notably Mariánské Lázně (Marienbad) and Karlovy Vary (Karlsbad). A total of 3,518,456 tourists visited Czechoslovakia in 1969, including a considerable proportion from West European and overseas countries, but this figure is still below the number of visitors before the invasion of 1968. There is a special tourist exchange rate of 38.36 Kčs. to £1 sterling.

Visas are required by nationals of all non-communist countries.

Sport

Two voluntary bodies, the Czechoslovak Union of Physical Training and the Czechoslovak Union for Physical Culture, plan the development of sport, conduct research and encourage physical training of all kinds. According to the latest available figures, there are about 7,842 sports clubs in Czechoslovakia, having a total of 1,752,460 members. The largest sections are football 367,704 members, track and field athletics with 60,397 members, handball 49,232 members, followed by basketball, ice-hockey, water sports and chess in order of popularity.

THE CONSTITUTION

(Proclaimed on July 11th, 1960; amended October 1968 and July 1971)

The Czechoslovak Socialist Republic is a unitary State of two fraternal nations possessing equal rights, the Czechs and the Slovaks.

According to the Constitution, work in the interests of the community is a primary duty and the right to work a primary right of every citizen. All citizens have equal rights and equal duties without regard to nationality and race. Remuneration for work done is based on its quantity, quality and social importance. Men and women have equal status. All citizens have the right to health protection, education and leisure after work including paid holidays. Other rights include: freedom of expression, assembly, inviolability of the person, the home, mails, etc. Everyone has the right to profess any religious faith or to be without religious conviction.

The economic foundation of the State is the Socialist economic system which excludes every form of exploitation of man by man. The means of production are socially owned and the entire national economy is directed by plan. Socialist ownership includes both national property such as mineral wealth, the means of industrial production, banks, etc., and co-operative property. The land of members of agricultural co-operatives remains the personal property of the individual members, but is jointly farmed by the co-operative. Small private enterprises based on the labour of the owner himself and excluding exploitation of another's labour power are permitted. Personal ownership of consumer goods, family houses and savings derived from labour is inviolable. Inheritance of such personal property is guaranteed.

By the Constitutional Law on Federalization, passed by the National Assembly on October 27th, 1968, the Czechoslovak Socialist Republic became, on January 1st, 1969, a federal state of two nations of equal rights—the Czechs and the Slovaks. It is composed of two republics: the Czech Socialist Republic and the Slovak Socialist Republic. Each of them has its own government.

The supreme organ of state power in the Czechoslovak Socialist Republic is the Federal Assembly (Parliament) which is elected for a five-year term and elects the President of the Republic. The Federal Assembly consists of two chambers of equal rights: the House of the People and the House of Nations. The composition of the House of the People corresponds to the composition of the population of the Czechoslovak Socialist Republic and of its 200 deputies, 138 are Czechs and 62 Slovaks. The House of Nations has 150 deputies on parity basis: 75 are elected in the Czech Socialist Republic and 75 in the Slovak Socialist Republic.

The President, elected by the Federal Assembly, appoints the Federal Government. The Government is the supreme executive organ of State power in Czechoslovakia; it consists of a Prime Minister, his deputies, ministers and state secretaries. It is composed of seven ministries, seven federal committees and other bodies. Of these the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and the Ministry of National Defence are within the exclusive competence of the Federation, i.e. there are no corresponding portfolios in the governments of the republics. The second group of Federal Government organs are ministries and federal committees (the federal committees are composed equally of members from the Czech Socialist Republic and the Slovak Socialist Republic), sharing authority with organs of the two republics, i.e. there are corresponding portfolios in the national governments.

Each of the republics has its own parliament: the Czech National Council and the Slovak National Council. They are elected for a five-year term of office. The Czech National Council has 200 deputies, the Slovak National Council 150 deputies. The Czech Government consists of a Prime Minister, 2 deputy Prime Ministers and 18 Ministers; the Slovak Government consists of a Prime Minister, 2 deputy Prime Ministers and 16 Ministers.

National committees are the organs of popular self-government in the regions, districts and localities. They rely on the active participation of the working people of their area and co-operate with other organizations of the people. They direct local economic and cultural development, ensure the protection of socialist ownership and the maintenance of socialist order in society, see to the implementation and observance of laws, etc. They take part in drafting and carrying out the State plan for the development of the national economy and draw up their own budgets which form a part of the State budget. Commissions elected by the national committees are charged with various aspects of public work and carry out their tasks with the aid of a large number of citizens who need not be elected members of the national committees.

All representative bodies are elected, and the right to elect is universal, equal and by secret ballot. Every citizen has the right to vote on reaching the age of 18, and is eligible for election on reaching the age of 21. Deputies must maintain constant contacts with their constituents, heed their suggestions and be accountable to them for their activity. A member of any representative body may be recalled by his constituents at any time.

The execution of justice is vested in elected and independent people's courts. Benches are composed of professional judges and of judges who carry out their function in addition to their regular employment. Both categories are equal in making decisions. Judges are independent in the discharge of their office and bound solely by the legal order of the socialist State. The supervision of the observance of the laws and other legal regulations by public bodies and by individual citizens rests with the Office of the Procurator. The Procurator-General is appointed and recalled by the President of the Republic and is accountable to the Federal Assembly.

The Czechoslovak Constitution does not restrict itself to laying down a system of state organs but also sets forth the principles by which the life of society is to be guided. It is not just a Constitution of the State but a constitution for the whole of society. In economic, political and cultural life, in questions of social security and many other spheres it emphasizes the participation of citizens in the administration of public affairs and even transfers a number of functions that have hitherto pertained to state organs to the working people and their voluntary organizations.

The guiding force in society and in the State is the Communist Party of Czechoslovakia, a voluntary militant alliance of the most active and politically conscious citizens. It is associated with the other political parties, the Trade Union Movement and other people's organizations in the National Front of Czechs and Slovaks.

CZECHOSLOVAKIA—(THE GOVERNMENT)

REVISED ELECTORAL SYSTEM, 1968

By a new law passed in the National Assembly new, larger electoral districts are to be established from which from four to eight deputies will be elected. Alternative candidates may also be put forward by the National Front, permitting a choice by the electorate. Those candidates who poll the most votes will become deputies, and the remainder will be made alternate deputies; in all cases candidates must poll more than 50 per cent of the votes. The new post of alternate deputy will give experience in the work of the representative bodies to those not elected as deputies, and will eliminate by-elections, as alternate deputies may take up vacated seats during the session of the Assembly.

JUDICIAL SYSTEM

Justice is executed through elected courts which consist of three ranks of law courts: the Supreme Court of the Czechoslovak Socialist Republic (together with Supreme Courts of the Czech and Slovak Socialist Republics), Regional and District Courts. There are also Military Courts which are subject to special regulations. Judges of the Czechoslovak Supreme Court are elected by the Federal Assembly; judges of the Czech and Slovak Supreme Courts and of the Regional and District Courts are elected by the National Councils of the respective republics. Judges are of two kinds, professional and lay judges, the latter having other occupations, but both types have equal authority. Lay judges are elected by District National Committees.

Chairman of the Supreme Court: Dr. VOJTĚCH PŘICHYSTAL.

Supervision of the observance of laws and legal regulations rests with the Procurator-General who is appointed by the President of the Republic and accountable to the Federal Assembly.

THE PRESS

Although the Czechoslovak Press was considerably affected by the events of 1968, its basic purpose is still as defined in the October 1966 Press Law: "to give as far as possible complete information . . . to advance the interest of socialist society . . . to promote the people's socialist awareness of the policy of the Communist Party as the leading force in society and state".

This law, which codified previous legislation on the rights and duties of journalists and publishers and established a new Central Administration for Publications under the Ministry of Education and Culture (later under the Ministry of Culture and Information), states that "freedom of expression and of the Press is guaranteed by the fact that publishers and press organizations . . . have been placed at the disposal of the working people and their organizations". Hence, only political parties and such social institutions as trade unions, youth unions, cultural associations and rural co-operatives may own newspapers and periodicals. Private ownership is forbidden. But even collective ownership rests upon official approval; in October 1967 the central committee of the Communist Party transferred control of the powerful weekly Literární noviny from the Writers' Union to the Ministry of Culture as it had become "a platform for opposition political views".

During 1968 there was freedom of publication and Western books circulated in large editions. Censorship was abolished in June, but restored again in September. Further restrictions were imposed on the Press during 1969 and changes were made on the editorial boards of many papers to restore the Press to its 1967 state.

The Czechoslovak people far exceed other East European nations in their consumption per head of newspapers and magazines. There are twenty-nine daily papers, including nine in Prague and nine (one in Hungarian and the rest in Slovak) in Bratislava. About 500 weekly papers and magazines and an even greater number of less frequent periodicals are also published. In addition, farms and factories produce their own daily or weekly news-sheets, dealing mainly with local issues.

Political speeches and articles on social and economic development are given special prominence. In contrast with much of the East European Press, which is often characterized as dull and lacking in popular appeal, the Czechoslovak Press is relatively lively and colourful and allows a qualified scope for criticism. There is no tabloid press as the policy is to play down such items as constitute the sort of sensationalism familiar to the West. Advertising is now more common than formerly, and although mainly concerned with state enterprises, it includes some material from abroad. Sales are mainly by subscription.

The most widely read and influential papers are the Prague dailies headed by Rudé právo. This paper, modelled on the Moscow Pravda, is the chief organ of the Czechoslovak Communist Party. It is eight pages long and receives an official allocation of newsprint. Produced both in Prague and Bratislava, it has a nation-wide circulation of 900,000 copies. Its sister paper, the Slovak C.P.'s Pravda (270,000), is the leading provincial daily. The Czech and the Slovak Trade Union organs are Práce and Práca in their respective cities. Two other important metropolitan dailies are Lidová demokracie and Svobodné slovo, produced respectively by the People's Party and the Socialist Party.

There are also many small circulation periodicals—often of very high quality—dealing with specialized subjects. One should also note several very popular and colourful women's magazines, such as Vlasta (650,000), and the satirical Dikobraz, famous for its political cartoons.

The Times and Le Monde are the only non-Communist Western newspapers allowed.

The national news agency, Československá Tisková Kancelář (ČTK), receives a state subsidy and is controlled by the Ministry of Information.

PUBLISHERS

In May 1949 legislation was passed making the publication, printing, illustration, and distribution of all books and music the prerogative of the State. These activities are now restricted to the Government, political parties, trade unions, and national and communal bodies. However, churches and religious bodies are permitted to publish if the State will accept their work for printing. In 1968 two new publishing associations were established, the Czech Association of Publishers and Booksellers, and the Slovak Association of Publishers and Booksellers. These operate in Czech lands and in Slovakia respectively. Almost all publishing houses are members of their appropriate association. In 1970, 6,235 titles were published.

DENMARK

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Kingdom of Denmark consists of the peninsula of Jutland, the islands of Zealand, Funen and Bornholm and 480 smaller islands between the North Sea and the Baltic. Outlying possessions are Greenland, and the Faroe Islands in the North Atlantic. Denmark is low-lying and the climate is temperate with cold winters. The language is Danish. The Danish Lutheran Church is the established Church, to which 95 per cent of the population belong, and there are small communities of Roman Catholics, Baptists and Jews. The flag carries a white cross on a red background. The capital is Copenhagen.

Recent History

On the ending of German occupation in 1945 Denmark immediately recognized the independence of Iceland, which had been declared the previous year. Later in the year she joined the United Nations. In 1947 King Frederik IX succeeded to the throne on the death of his father, Christian X. Home rule was granted to the Faroe Islands one year later. Denmark was a founder member of NATO in 1949 and of the Nordic Council in 1952. The following year saw a radical revision of the Constitution, the major provisions of which were to allow female succession to the throne, to abolish the Upper House in favour of a unicameral system, to establish parliamentary rule de jure, to define Ministerial responsibility, to change the franchise and make provision for referenda and to change Greenland's status from colony to a part of the Kingdom. In January 1972 King Frederik died and his eldest daughter, Margrethe, became the first queen to rule Denmark for nearly six hundred years.

The 1953 constitution, incorporating a system of proportional representation, made it difficult for a single party to gain an absolute majority and a minority government led by the Social Democrats held power until defeated in the General Election in January 1968. A government was then formed from the Radical Liberal, Conservative and Liberal parties led by Hilmar Baunsgaard. However this coalition was narrowly defeated in September 1971 and the Socialists, led by Jens Otto Krag, returned to power with a majority of one.

Government

Denmark is a constitutional monarchy, legislative power being vested in the Queen in conjunction with the Folketing (Parliament). Executive power is exercised by the Queen through her ministers. The Folketing is unicameral, elected by and from Danish subjects of 21 and over. The Faroe Islands and Greenland are each represented by two members.

Defence

Denmark maintains an Army of 24,000 men, a Navy of 6,500 men and an Air Force of 10,000 men. The Army consists of field forces and a home guard which has a force of about 116,000 men at its disposal. The Navy has frigates, escort vessels, submarines, minelayers, minesweepers and fast patrol craft. The Air Force has fighters and fighter-bombers of American and British types. National Service lasts for 12 months. Denmark abandoned its neutrality after the Second World War and has been a member of NATO since 1949. Defence policy is largely geared to NATO co-operation. Estimated total defence expenditure for 1971-72 was about 3,077 million kroner.

Economic Affairs

Danish agriculture is internationally competitive and is organised on a co-operative basis. Farmers and small-holders are grouped in co-operative societies which market the produce and conduct scientific research. The co-operatives are united in national federations. Butter, eggs and bacon are the main agricultural exports. Three-quarters of the land surface is used for agriculture and though this percentage has been declining recently the intensive nature of the farming has to a large extent maintained the level of production. However, Denmark has industrialized considerably in the last fifteen years and agriculture now accounts for a smaller percentage of the gross national product. In spite of the complete lack of raw materials the iron and metal industry is now the most important producing group. The other major industries are food-processing and beverages, fishing, ship-building, engineering and chemicals. Recently Danish-designed furniture, electronics, porcelain, textiles and metal goods have been finding larger markets abroad. Most industrial concerns are small and privately owned, only the public services such as the post, railways, etc. being nationalized.

Over the last few years Denmark has experienced one of the highest rates of inflation in Europe. Owing to a change in the taxation system 1969 was a tax-free year, and although productivity rose to a record level, consumer expenditure also rose rapidly. One of the main problems is the balance of payments, which has been in deficit every year since 1963. The government has taken numerous measures to improve the situation including, in October 1971, the imposition of a 10 per cent surcharge on imports.

In 1960 Denmark was a founder member of EFTA and now over half her exports go to member countries. However, as Norway, the U.K. and Federal Germany are her most important markets after Sweden, she applied to join the EEC in 1967 and 1970. Parliament voted in favour of signing a treaty for entry in December 1971, though approval still has to be sought by means of a referendum.

Transport and Communications

There are about 2,900 kilometres of railways, most of which are operated by the State and the rest by companies in which the State or public authorities have a financial interest. There are over 61,000 kilometres of road, 86 per cent of which are hard surface. There is an extensive bus service using many bridges. Ferry services connect the principal islands and Jutland and there are services to Sweden, Norway and Germany. Denmark maintains a large merchant navy with a gross tonnage of over 3 million. There are seven airports, the largest being the international airport at Copenhagen-Kastrup.

DENMARK—(INTRODUCTORY SURVEY, STATISTICAL SURVEY)

Social Welfare

Denmark was one of the first countries to introduce State social welfare schemes. Principal services cover unemployment, sickness, old age and disability and are financed largely by State subventions. Health insurance is compulsory for all citizens over 21.

Education

Education is compulsory and free at the primary stage between 7 and 14 years, but it is proposed to extend this to 15 years in 1972 and 16 years in 1973. Secondary education which offers a wide scope for transfer from one form of education to another, is also given free as, on the whole, is university and other higher education. Although pupils may leave after seven years at primary-school (Folkeskolen), many continue for a further two or three years at the same school in order to pass their school-leaving exam (realeksamen). Having gained the school-leaving certificate, a pupil may then transfer to a high-school (Gymnasium) for a further three years. Success in the exam (studentereksamen) taken at the end of the Gymnasium course is a qualification for university entrance. There are three universities, a technical university and a network of Folk High Schools for adults, chiefly young farmers.

Tourism

Tourism is organised by the National Travel Association of Denmark. Receipts from tourism totalled 2,357 million Kroner in 1970.

Visas are not required for nationals of the following countries: Algeria, Australia, Austria, Belgium, Canada, Cyprus, Finland, France, German Federal Republic, Greece, Iceland, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Kenya, Liechtenstein, Luxembourg, Malaysia, Mexico, Monaco, Morocco, The Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Pakistan, Portugal, San Marino, Sierra Leone, Singapore, South Africa, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, Tanzania, Thailand, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, United Kingdom and Dependencies, U.S.A., Yugoslavia, and all countries of South and Central America.

Sport

Fifteen per cent of the population take an active part in sports. Practically all sport is amateur. The national game is football, and rowing, swimming and sailing are popular. Other sports include tennis, the Danish game of hand-ball, shooting and fishing.

Public Holidays

1972: March 30 (Maundy Thursday), March 31 (Good Friday), April 3 (Easter Monday), April 28 (Store Bededag), May 11 (Ascension Day), May 22 (Whit Monday), June 5 (Constitution Day), December 24, 25, 26 (Christmas), December 31 (New Year's Eve).

1973: January 1 (New Year's Day).

Weights and Measures

The Metric System is in force.

Currency and Exchange Rates

The monetary unit is the Krone (kr.) which is divided into 100 ore.

Notes: Kroner 500, 100, 50, 10.

Coins: Kroner 5, 1; Ore 25, 10, 5, 2, 1.

Exchange rate: 18.19 Kroner = £1 sterling

THE CONSTITUTION

The main features of the 1953 Constitution are:

- (1) Changes in the succession law allowing a daughter to succeed to the throne in the absence of sons;
- (2) Abolition of the Upper House and the introduction of single-chamber Parliament;
- (3) The enfranchisement of Greenland, which will in future send two members to Parliament; and
- (4) Clause 20, which enables Parliament to assign some of its rights to an international body in the interest of international co-operation.

The form of government is a limited (constitutional) monarchy. The legislative authority rests jointly with the Crown and Parliament. Executive power is vested in the Crown, and the administration of justice is exercised by the courts. The King can constitutionally "do no wrong". He exercises his authority through the Ministers appointed by him. The Ministers are responsible for the government of the country. The Constitution establishes the principle of Parliamentarism under which individual Ministers of the whole Cabinet must retire when defeated in Parliament by a vote of no confidence.

The King acts on behalf of the State in international affairs. Except with the consent of the Parliament, he cannot, however, take any action which increases or reduces the area of the Realm or undertake any obligation, the fulfilment of which requires the co-operation of the Parliament or which is of major importance. Nor can the King, without the consent of the Parliament, terminate any international agreement which has been concluded with the consent of the Parliament.

Apart from defence against armed attack on the Realm or on Danish forces, the King cannot, without the consent of the Parliament, employ military force against any foreign power.

The Parliament is an assembly consisting of not more than 179 members, two of whom are elected in the Faroe Islands and two in Greenland. It is called the Folketing. Danish nationals, having attained 21 years of age, with permanent residence in Denmark, have the franchise and are eligible. The members of the Folketing are elected for four years. Election is by a system of proportional representation, with direct and secret ballot on lists in large constituencies. A bill adopted by the Folketing may be submitted to referendum, when such referendum is claimed by not less than one-third of the members of the Folketing and not later than three days after the adoption. The bill is void if rejected by a majority of the votes cast, representing not less than 30 per cent of all electors.

POLITICAL PARTIES

Socialdemokratiske Parti (The Social-Democratic Party): Rosenørns allé 14, Copenhagen V; founded in 1871, finds its chief adherents among the industrial and farm workers. The Party's policy is based on democratic socialism. Number of members 200,000. Chair. JENS OTTO KRAG. Party organs: Aktuelt and Ny Politik (monthly).

Venstre (The Moderate-Liberal Party): Hammerichsgade 14, Copenhagen V; founded in 1870. Its main adherents have been farmers but recently its votes have been distributed almost equally between the rural districts, the towns and built-up areas, so that it may claim to have adherents in all classes of the community. The main planks in the Party platform are free trade, a minimum of State interference, and the adoption, in matters of social expenditure, of a modern general social security system. Pres. POUL HARTLING; Sec.-Gen. KURT SORENSEN. Chief party organs: Fyns Tidende, Vesthysten, Frederiksborg Amts Avis, Venstres Maanedssblad (monthly), Dansk Politik (monthly).

Konservative Folkeparti (Conservative Party): Nyrops-gade 19, 1602 Copenhagen; founded in 1916, replacing the former Højreparti (the Right-Wing or old Conservative Party). The Party advocates free initiative and the maintenance of private property, but recognizes the right of the State to take action to keep the economic and social balance. Chair. K. THESTRUP; Gen. Sec. KAI AAGE ØRNSKOV; Political Spokesman POUL SCHLÜTER. Chief party organ: Vor Tid.

Socialistisk Folkeparti (Socialist People's Party): Folketinget, Christiansborg, Copenhagen; f. 1959, with Socialist aims, by AKSEL LARSEN, formerly Chairman of the Communist Party; Chair. SIGURD ØMANN; Sec. KNUD STENBÆK. Chief party organ: S.F. Bladet (weekly).

Det Radikale Venstre (The Radical Liberal Party): Det radikale Venstres kontor, Christiansborg Slot, Copenhagen K; founded in 1905. Its chief adherents are the smallholders and certain intellectuals. The main points in its programme are reduction of armaments, supporting peace, international co-operation and the United Nations, arbitration in conflict between workers and employers, the establishment of smallholdings, social reform, and State control of trusts and monopolies. Advocates strengthening of private enterprise. Chair. HILMAR BAUNSGAARD; Sec. S. BJØRN HANSEN; Chief party organs: Politiken, Skive Folkeblad, Holbaek Amts Venstreblad, Roskilde Tidende.

De Uafhængige (Independent Party): Nygade 25, 8600 Silkeborg; f. 1953; Chair. P. NØRBY CHRISTENSEN.

Danmarks Retsforbund: Kroghsgade 1, 2100 Copenhagen Ø; made its appearance in active politics about 1920. Its programme is closely allied to Henry George's teachings (single tax, free trade). Chair. IB CHRISTENSEN. Party organ: Ret og Frihed (monthly).

Danmarks Kommunistiske Parti (Danish Communist Party): Copenhagen K; Dr. Tvaergade 3; f. 1919. Leader KNUD JESPERSEN. Chief party organ: Land og Folk.

Left Socialist Party: f. 1967 as a result of a split from the Socialist People's Party. Collective leadership.

JUDICIAL SYSTEM

In Denmark the judiciary is independent of the Government. Judges are appointed by the Crown on the recommendation of the Minister of Justice and cannot be dismissed except by judicial sentence.

The ordinary courts are divided into three instances, namely the Lower Courts, the High Courts and the Supreme Court. There is one Lower Court for each of the more than 100 judicial districts in the country. These courts must have at least one legally trained judge and they hear the majority of minor cases. The two High Courts serve Jutland and the islands respectively. They serve as appeal courts for cases from the lower courts, but are also used to give first hearing to the more important cases. Each case must be heard by at least three judges. The Supreme Court, at which at least five judges must sit, is the court of appeal for cases from the Higher Courts. Usually only one appeal is allowed from either court, but in special instances the Minister of Justice may give leave for a second appeal, to the Supreme Court, from a case which started in a lower court.

There is a special Maritime and Commercial Court in Copenhagen, consisting of a President and Vice-President with legal training and a number of commercial and nautical assessors; and also a Labour Court, which deals with labour disputes.

An Ombudsman is appointed by Parliament, after each general election, and is concerned with defects in the laws or administrative provisions. He must render to Parliament an annual report.

Supreme Court: Pres. J. TROLLE; Judges: P. HERMANN, T. F. GJERULFF, T. E. PETERSEN, P. A. SPLETH, H. TAMM, A. BLOM-ANDERSEN, H. A. SØRENSEN, E. VETLI, C. LOUIS LE MAIRE, M. HVIDT, HELGA PEDERSEN, H. C. SCHAUMBURG, P. HØYRUP, F. THYGESEN.

RELIGION

Ninety-five per cent of the adult population of Denmark belong to the Danish Lutheran Church, but only 2.8 per cent go to church once a week.

Den Evangelisk-lutherske Folkekirke i Danmark (The Danish Lutheran Church) is the established Church of Denmark, and is supported by the State.

Bishops: W. WESTERGAARD MADSEN, Copenhagen K.; J. B. LEER ANDERSEN, Helsingør; HANS KVIST, Roskilde; TH. GRÆSHOLT, Nykøbing/F; K. C. HOLM, Odense; ERIK JENSEN, Aalborg; JOHNS. W. JACOBSEN, Viborg; H. N. HØIRUP, Aarhus; H. DONS CHRISTENSEN, Ribe; T. V. KRAGH, Haderslev.

There are approximately 4,448,000 members.

The Roman Catholic Church: Frederiksgade 7, Copenhagen K; 26,000 members; Bishop: HANS LUDVIG MARTENSEN, Bishop of Copenhagen.

Det Danske Baptistsamfund (Baptist Union of Denmark): Marsalavej 14, Copenhagen S; f. 1839; 6,828 mems.; Pres. Rev. S. A. HAGSTRØM; Gen. Sec. Rev. KNUD WÜMPERMANN; publ. Baptisternes Ugeblad (weekly).

Jewish Synagogue: Krystalgade 12, Copenhagen; there are about 7,000 Jews; Chief Rabbi BENT MELCHIOR.

English Church: Amaliegade at Esplanaden, Copenhagen; f. 1728; Chaplain; Rev. HUGH PICTON.

THE PRESS

Denmark's long press history dates from the first newspaper published in 1666, but it was not until press freedom was introduced by law in 1849 that newspapers began to assume their present importance. At four copies published daily for every ten inhabitants, the per capita circulation of Danish newspapers is one of the highest in the world. There are over 220 separate newspapers, and over 60 main dailies.

The freedom of the press is embodied in paragraph 77 of the 1953 Constitution and all censorship laws have been abolished. The legal limits to press comment are wide, legislation on defamation being chiefly concerned to protect the reputation of the individual. The Law of 1938 included provision for a Board of Denials and Corrections to be established to guard the individual's right to require a newspaper to correct factual errors. This Press Law makes editors legally responsible for the contents of a paper with the exception of signed articles for which the author is responsible.

Most newspapers and magazines are privately owned and published by joint concerns, co-operatives or limited liability companies. Ownership is usually restricted in number or confined to residents of the area in which the paper circulates.

The main concentration of papers is held by the Berlingske Tidende Group which owns Berlingske Tidende, Berlingske Aftenavis, B.T., and the provincial Jydske Tidende, also three weekly magazines and a large printing works. In all, this family organization controls some 25 per cent of the total daily newspaper circulation.

Another company, Politiken A/S, owns several dailies, including Politiken and Ekstra Bladet, one weekly and a large publishing house. De Bergske Blade owns a group of six Liberal papers.

Copenhagen accounts for 16 per cent of the national dailies and about half the total circulation. The provincial press has declined since the last war, but still tends to be more politically orientated than the majority of Copenhagen dailies. The Communist Party's Land og Folk is the only paper to be directly owned by a political party, although all papers show a fairly pronounced political leaning. The eight Social Democrat papers, headed by Copenhagen's Aktuelt, are owned and subsidized by the trade unions.

Daily newspapers have a far more influential place in Danish life than weeklies. As the largest papers have only a small circulation outside the city and suburbs of Copenhagen, e.g. 14 per cent in the case of Berlingske Tidende, they can barely claim to be national. The most popular papers give a broad and serious news coverage; there is no really sensational press. The major Copenhagen dailies in order of circulation are Ekstra Bladet (215,000), B.T. (180,000), Berlingske Tidende (160,000), Politiken (135,000) and Aktuelt (105,000). The serious evening paper Information and the weekly Berlingske Aftenavis are also rather influential. Jyllands-Posten (76,515), published at Aarhus, is the largest provincial paper.

FINANCE

(cap. = capital; p.u. = paid up; dep. = deposits; m. = million)

The National Bank of Denmark is the country's central bank and, though it is under the supervision of the government, it is a self-governing institution, independent of the State. It can therefore, with certain limits, pursue an independent economic policy. By the terms of the National Bank Act it is solely responsible for putting into circulation all notes and coins. In 1936 the act specified that the amount of issued notes should be covered by gold reserves of at least 25 per cent. However this demand has been shelved since 1931 and now all note issue which is not backed by gold has to be guaranteed by bills of exchange, securities noted on the Stock Exchange, or outstanding accounts or loans for which adequate security has been provided.

The first commercial banks were founded 125 years ago and now there are approximately 100 banks with some 1,900 branches. This is a very high number in proportion to the size of the country but an increasing trend towards mergers is expected to rationalize the system soon. There are also some 300 savings banks in the country. Though the Savings Bank Act does not allow them to engage in commercial banking activities there is a considerable overlap in the activities of the Commercial Banks and the Savings Banks. Both these groups are under the supervision of the Ministry of Trade.

THE FAROE ISLANDS

Introductory Survey

The Faroes are a group of islands in the Atlantic between Scotland and Iceland with a total area of 1,399 square kilometres. The climate is mild in winter and cool in summer with a mean temperature of 7°C. The vegetation is mostly grass, moss and mountain bog, the only trees being found in plantations. Of these islands seventeen are inhabited and in 1970 the total population was 38,681. Some 10,000 of these live in Thorshavn, the capital. Most Faroese are Lutherans belonging to the Danish National Church. The principle language is Faroese but Danish must be taught in all schools. The flag carries a red cross with a blue edge on a white field.

The Faroe Islands have been under Danish administration since Queen Margrete of Denmark inherited Norway in 1380. The islands were taken over by the United Kingdom while Denmark was under German occupation but were restored immediately after the war. The Home Rule Act of 1948 gave them control over all their internal affairs but the Danish Folketing, to which the Faroese send two members, looks after all matter of mutual concern. These include defence and foreign policy, but opposition to both the EEC and NATO is growing and causing speculation that the islands may seek full independence.

Government

The legislative body is the Lagting of up to thirty members elected on a basis of proportional representation. All Faroese over the age of twenty-one have the right to vote. Based on the strength of the parties in the Lagting a small Government, the Landshovdingen, is formed and this holds the executive power for all internal affairs. The Lagmand or Chairman has to ratify all Lagting laws. A commissioner known as the Rigsombudsmand represents the Kingdom and is in charge of the administration on the islands.

Economic Affairs

Only a small portion of the land surface is cultivated and as the summers are too cool for grain, the main crops are potatoes and vegetables and grass for the large number of sheep raised on the islands. Coal is mined at Sudero and about one fifth of the working population is engaged in handicrafts. The most important factor in the Faroese economy is the fishing and whaling, which employs a quarter of the labour force and accounts for nearly all the exports. Thus the Faroe Islands are anxious to negotiate separate terms with regard to fishing rights if Denmark enters the EEC and they have threatened to declare complete independence if terms cannot be agreed. However their trade gap amounts to some £3 million per year and they are dependent on Denmark to make good this deficit.

In 1940 the Faroese Krona was introduced. It must, however, always be freely interchangeable with the Danish Krone at the rate of 1:1. For exchange rate see under Denmark.

The main bank is the Sjóvinnu Bank in Thorshavn.

Education

The educational system is the same as that for Denmark. There are five secondary schools, one high school, a navigation school and technical schools on the islands.

The Press

There are no daily papers in the Faroe Islands.

Dagbladið: Thorshavn; twice a week.

Dimaloetting: Thorshavn; twice a week.

Føroyatíddindi: Trangisvaag; weekly.

14 September: Thorshavn; three times a week.

Socialurin: Thorshavn; twice a week.

Radio

Utlarp Foroya: Thorshavn, P.O. Box 128; Man. N. J. ARGE.

There are three stations broadcasting one programme.

Number of receivers (1970): 11,000.

Transport

The main harbour is at Thorshavn; the other ports are at Fugelfjord, Klaksvig, Trangisvaag, Vaag and Vestermahavn. There are regular services to Denmark, Iceland and the Shetlands. An airport has been planned for Thorshavn.

GREENLAND

Introductory Survey

Greenland is the world's largest island with a total area of two million square kilometres. Most of it is permanently covered by ice but 341,700 square kilometres of coastland is inhabitable. In 1970 the total population was 46,331 of which some 6,000 live in Godthåb, the largest town. Both Danish and Eskimo languages are used.

Greenland first came under Danish rule in 1380 although contact was lost between the sixteenth and eighteenth centuries. During the Second World War the U.S.A. took over control of Greenland but handed it back when Denmark was liberated from German rule. As part of the revision of the Danish constitution in 1953 Greenland became part of the kingdom and Denmark now takes care of all its external affairs, including defence. The Greenlanders are not subject to compulsory national service.

Government

Denmark is represented in Greenland by the Landskøvedingen or Governor, N. O. CHRISTENSEN. Until 1967 he presided over meetings of the Landsraad, the provincial council, but now they choose their own chairman. This council, consisting of seventeen members, is elected by all Danish subjects over the age of 21 living in Greenland. All bills which relate to Greenland must be presented to the council before they go to the Folketing in Copenhagen. The Greenlanders are also able to vote for two members of the Folketing.

Economic Affairs

Seal-hunting has traditionally been the main occupation in Greenland and it is still very important in the northern district. In the South sheep-rearing is on the increase and in the central coastal areas fishing is of prime importance though some industrial establishments are being set up. The world's only commercially exploitable deposits of cryolite are mined there and they make a large contribution to the exports along with fish, sealskin and foxskin. Recently there has been much prospecting for uranium and other minerals both in Greenland and on its continental shelf but the economy is still dependent on large subsidies from Denmark.

Education and Social Welfare

The educational system is the same as that for the main part of Denmark, except that the main language of instruction is Greenlandic. Danish is however quite widely used, as many teachers come from Denmark for a short term to relieve the shortage of local teachers. There is a school in every settlement and a teacher training college in Godthåb.

There is a free health service for all residents, paid for by Denmark.

Judicial System

The island is divided into sixteen court districts and these courts all use lay assessors. For most cases these lower courts are for the first instance and appeal is to the Laadsret, the higher court in Godthåb, which is the only one with a professional judge. This court hears the more serious cases and appeal is to the High Court in Copenhagen.

Religion

The Greenlandic Church comes under the Bishop of Copenhagen and under the Ministry for Ecclesiastical Affairs. Responsibility for the inspection of vicarages in Greenland lies with a rural dean resident on the island.

Radio and Television

Angmagssalik Radio: Angmagssalik Radiostation, Angmagssalik.

Grønlands Radio: Grønlands Radiofoni, Godthåb; Dir. of Broadcasting J. CHEMNITZ; Technical Dir. B. N. ROER.

Radioavisen (Radio News Service): Godthåb; the service is run by the Danish Government and enjoys complete freedom and independence; Head of Service BENT JENSEN.

U.S. Armed Forces Radio and Television Service: 4683 Air Base Group (ADC), (CIO/AFRTS), APO New York, N.Y. 09023, U.S.A.

Transport

Inland traffic is mainly by motorboat, sled and light aircraft but there are no regular services. Godthåb is the main port and there are also all-year ports at Faeringhavn, Frederikshåb, and Sukkertoppen. There is an airport at Søndre Strømfjord for flights to Denmark, which is also used as an interim stop for some transatlantic flights.

FINLAND

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

Finland is a republic in Northern Europe bordered in the far north by Norway and in the north-west by Sweden. The U.S.S.R. runs along the whole of the eastern frontier. Its western and southern shores are washed by the Baltic. The climate varies sharply with warm summers and very cold winters. The annual mean temperature is 5.4° (42°F) in Helsinki and -0.4° (31°F) in the far north. There are two official languages, 93 per cent of the population speak Finnish, and 7 per cent speak Swedish. Finnish is not one of the Scandinavian group of languages, being a member of the small Finno-Ugrian group which includes Hungarian. The Lapp population amount to about 2,500 in all. 93 per cent of the people belong to the National Lutheran Church of Finland but there are small groups of Roman Catholics, Methodists, Jews and other religious groups. The flag carries a blue cross on a white background. The capital is Helsinki.

Recent History

Finland ceded 12 per cent of her territory and paid very large reparations to the Soviet Union, with which she had been in conflict, at the close of the Second World War. In 1948 President Paasikivi and Stalin signed the Finno-Soviet Pact of Friendship, which was extended for twenty years from 1955, when the U.S.S.R. relinquished its military post on the Porkkala promontory. In every other respect Finland has maintained a policy of strict neutrality, refusing to be compromised by its proximity to the U.S.S.R. Finland became a member of the United Nations in 1955, joined the Nordic Council in 1961, and in the same year became an associate member of EFTA. Since 1969 Finland has been a full member of OECD. In July 1970 the Treaty of Friendship, Co-operation and Mutual Assistance between Finland and the Soviet Union was renewed for a further twenty years, although it was not due for renewal until 1975.

In the fifty-five years Finland has been independent there have been the same number of general elections. Usually seven or eight parties have been represented in the parliament but none has ever been able to obtain an overall majority. Negotiations for a coalition government have often been lengthy and it was not until four months after the general elections in March 1970 that Ahti Karjalainen was able to form a five party coalition government. In March 1971 the communists left the coalition and in October the government resigned after an internal dispute over agricultural prices. A non-party caretaker government was formed led by the Mayor of Helsinki, Teuvo Aura. Another election was held in January 1972, but after a month of negotiations no coalition could be formed and a minority government from the Socialist Party, led by Rafael Paasio, took office in February.

Government

Parliament is unicameral and elected for four years by the system of proportional representation. Suffrage is universal and equal, and the minimum voting age is twenty-one. The President of the Republic is voted for a six-year term by an electoral college elected by the citizens.

The Council of State is the executive organ responsible to Parliament and members are appointed by the President.

Defence

The armed forces of Finland are restricted by treaty to about 42,000, mostly conscripts serving up to 11 months. Estimated defence expenditure for 1971 was 646 million Marks, and the total strength of the armed forces in the same year was 39,500, comprising Army 34,000, Navy 2,500, and Airforce 3,000. There are also 685,000 reserves and about 3,000 frontier defence troops. The forces are armed with weapons manufactured in the Soviet Union and the West. The Treaty of Friendship, Co-operation and Mutual Assistance states that Finland must repel any attack upon the Soviet Union made across Finnish territory. Although Finland follows a policy of strict neutrality, her neutral status has not been legally recognized by the Soviet Union.

Economic Affairs

Finland's economy is based on coniferous forests which cover 72 per cent of the land. Forestry cultivation has been intensified in recent years and the country is one of the world's leading exporters of pulp and paper. The manufacture of furniture is important. Since the war the metal-working industry has prospered and the significance of the metal and engineering industries for output and employment now appreciably exceeds that of wood, pulp, and paper industries. Amongst the manufacturing industries, the textile and chemical industries in particular have experienced a rapid growth. Cereal and dairy farming are highly mechanized.

Since the devaluation of 1967 and the various stabilization measures which followed, including price and wages control, the Finnish economy has experienced a boom. The rate of inflation in Finland is lower than in any of the other Scandinavian countries.

Of Finland's trade 38 per cent is with EFTA countries, about 22 per cent with EEC, about 15 per cent with the other Nordic countries, and about 20 per cent with Eastern Europe. Principal trade partners are Great Britain, Sweden and Federal Germany. Now that negotiations concerning a proposed Nordic Economic Union have collapsed and Norway and Denmark have applied for membership of the EEC, Finland, like Sweden, is seeking some form of association with the EEC which does not compromise its neutral status.

Transport and Communications

There are about 5,680 kilometres (3,534 miles) of railways which provide connections with Sweden and the Soviet Union. The railways are state operated, most of the trains being run on diesel engines. There are 72,421 kilometres (45,000 miles) of highway, but traffic is relatively light. Extensive use is made of the canals which connect Finland's innumerable lakes; inland waterways are navigable by ships for over 4,351 miles. The Water Bus is a characteristic feature. In winter, water communications are paralyzed by the severe frost, but ice-breakers are used to open up channels for commercial traffic.

FINLAND—(INTRODUCTORY SURVEY, STATISTICAL SURVEY)

Social Welfare

Social Security covers unemployment, social insurance (national pensions, accident insurance and sickness insurance), social assistance (maternity allowances, child allowances, care of the disabled) and social welfare (public aid). Sickness insurance compensates the patient for a considerable part of the costs of medical care outside hospital and the general hospitals charge moderate fees.

Education

Eight years of compulsory education were introduced by law in 1921. The basic eight years, which are free, can be spent at a primary school, starting at the age of seven. After four years the pupil may transfer to a secondary school. Fees are payable for secondary education, but they may be waived or reduced according to the parent's means. Pupils who stay on at primary school may transfer to a technical or vocational school after their fifth school year. A new system is being introduced during 1972-78 providing for a uniform initial programme of six years to be followed by three years advanced study, all at the basic school. There are nine universities including a Swedish-speaking one at Turku. There are also six colleges of University standing and two Teacher Training colleges.

Tourism

Vast forests, numerous lakes, magnificent unspoilt scenery and the possibility of holiday seclusion are the chief attractions for the visitor to Finland. In the towns there are mediaeval churches and castles. The winter sports season is prolonged, and visitors may take the famous Finnish Sauna Bath. In 1970 nearly three million people visited Finland, mostly from Sweden. In 1969 receipts from tourism totalled $84 million.

Visas are not required for nationals of the following countries: Australia, Austria, Belgium, Canada, Chile, Colombia, Cyprus, Denmark, Ecuador, France, Gambia, German Federal Republic, Greece, Iceland, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Ivory Coast, Japan, Liechtenstein, Luxembourg, Malawi, Malaysia, Malta, Mexico, Monaco, Morocco, Netherlands, Niger, Norway, Peru, Portugal, San Marino, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, Tunisia, Turkey, U.K., U.S.A., Uruguay, Yugoslavia.

Sport

The national game is pesäpallo, a form of baseball. Football, skiing, skating, ice hockey, athletics and bandy, a form of ice hockey, are popular sports.

Public Holidays

1972: March 31 (Good Friday), April 1-3 (Easter), May 1 (May Day), May 11 (Ascension), May 22 (Whit Monday), June 24 (Midsummer Day), November 1 (All Saints), December 6 (Independence Day), December 25, 26 (Christmas).

1973: January 1 (New Year's Day), January 6 (Epiphany).

Weights and Measures

The Metric System is in force.

Currency and Exchange Rates

The currency unit is the Markka (mk.) = 100 Penni.

Notes: Markkas 100, 50, 10, 5, 1.

Coins: Markka 1. Penni 50, 20, 10, 5.

Exchange rate: 10.58 Markkas = £1 sterling

4.07 Markkas = $1 U.S.

THE CONSTITUTION

On December 6th, 1917, the Finnish Parliament approved a manifesto proclaiming the independence of the country. Recognition of this independence was received in December 1917 from the Russian Government; in January 1918 from France, Sweden and Germany; and later from other countries.

During the interregnum that ensued, the Parliament, having decided to exercise temporarily the authority belonging to the ruler of the State, on May 18th, 1918, authorized the Chairman of the Senate to exercise sovereign power, and thereafter, on December 12th, 1918, elected a Regent. Opinions were divided as to whether Finland should be a kingdom or a republic. But at the election of representatives in March 1919 the parties voting for a republic received a substantial majority, and a republican form of government was approved and proclaimed on July 17th, 1919.

THE PRESIDENT OF THE REPUBLIC

The President is elected for a term of six years by 300 electors. The electors are chosen by public vote in the same manner as members of the Parliament.

The President of the Republic is entrusted with supreme executive power. Legislative power is exercised by the Parliament in conjunction with the President. Both the President and the Parliament have the right of initiative in legislation. Laws passed by the Parliament are submitted to the President, who has the right of veto. If the President has not within three months assented to a law, this is tantamount to a refusal of his assent. A law to which the President has not given his assent will nevertheless come into force, if the Parliament elected at the next general election adopts it without alteration.

The President has also the right to issue decrees in certain events, to convene extraordinary meetings of the Parliament, to dissolve the Parliament, to order new elections to the Parliament, to grant pardons and dispensations, and to grant Finnish citizenship to foreigners.

The President's approval is necessary in all matters concerning the relations of Finland with foreign countries, and he is Supreme Commander of the Defence Forces of the Republic.

Such decisions as are arrived at by the President are made by him in the Council of State, except in matters pertaining to military functions and appointments.

GOVERNMENT

For the general administration of the country there is a Council of State, appointed by the President, and composed of the Prime Minister and the Ministers of the various Ministries. The members of the Council, who must enjoy the confidence of the Parliament, are collectively responsible to it for their conduct of affairs, and for the general policy of the administration; while each member is responsible for the administration of his own Ministry.

To this Council or Cabinet the President can appoint supernumerary Ministers, who serve either as assistant Ministers or as Ministers without portfolio. The President also appoints a Chancellor of Justice, who must see that the Council and its members act within the law. If in his opinion the Council of State or an individual Minister has acted in a manner contrary to the law, the Chancellor of Justice must report the matter to the President of the Republic or in certain cases to the Parliament. In this way Ministers are rendered legally as well as politically responsible for their official acts.

THE PARLIAMENT

The Parliament is an assembly of one chamber with 200 members elected for four years by universal suffrage on a system of proportional representation, every man and woman who is twenty-one or over being entitled to vote. It assembles yearly without special summons. The ordinary duration of a session is 120 days, but the Parliament can at its pleasure extend or shorten its session. The opposition of one-third of the members can cause ordinary legislative proposals to be deferred till after the next elections. Discussion of questions relating to the constitutional laws belongs also to the Parliament, but for the settlement of such questions certain delaying conditions (fixed majorities) are prescribed. The Parliament, besides taking part in legislation, has the right to determine the estimates, which, though not technically a law, are published as a law.

Furthermore, the Parliament has the right, in a large measure to supervise the administration of the Government. For this purpose it receives special reports, the Government also submitting an account of its administration every year, and a special account of the administration of national finances. The Chancellor of Justice submits a yearly report on the administration of the Council of State. The Parliament elects five auditors, who submit to it annual reports of their work, to see that the estimates have been adhered to. The Parliament also appoints every four years an Ombudsman (Solicitor-General), who submits to it a report, to supervise the observance of the laws.

The Parliament has the right to interrogate the Government. It can impeach a member of the Council of State or the Chancellor of Justice for not having conformed to the law in the discharge of his duties. Trials are conducted at a special court, known as the Court of the Realm, of which one-half of the members, that is to say, six, are elected by the Parliament for a term of three years.

THE PRESS

The 1919 Constitution provided safeguards for press freedom in Finland. And in the same year the Freedom of the Press Act developed and qualified this principle by defining the rights and responsibilities of editors and the circumstances in which the Supreme Court may confiscate or suppress a publication. In practice there are few restrictions but the proximity of the Soviet Union casts its shadow in the form of legislation penalising defamation of foreign heads of state and anything which may endanger relations with neighbouring states. Consequently this aspect of political commentary is very restrained. Otherwise the most notable offences for newspapermen concern libel and copyright. Two notable features of the press scene are the public's legal right of access to all official documents (with important exceptions), and since 1966 the right of the journalist to conceal his source of news.

Almost all daily newspapers are independent companies, most of which are owned by large numbers of shareholders. Newspaper chains are virtually unknown. But the Finnish press is a party press. The small number of papers which are generally considered left-oriented are usually owned by the political parties concerned, by trade unions, or by other workers' associations (the Social Democratic Party's chief organ is Suomen Sosialidemokraatti; the Social Democratic Workers' Union publishes Päivän Sanomat, and the People's Democratic League (Communist) Kansan Uutiset.) On the other hand most of the right-wing newspapers are owned by private shareholders. Some even belong to private endowments. Leading organs of the Conservative Party are Uusi Suomi (90,000) and Aamulehti (115,000) in Tampere. The left-wing papers are subject to considerably closer influence from the parties to which they are affiliated than their right-wing counterparts. Privately owned newspapers—including some of the largest such as Helsingin Sanomat and Turun Sanomat—are usually independent of political parties, and the number of votes cast by the political parties in the 1966 election bears little relation to the respective circulation totals of affiliated newspapers.

Helsinki is the only large press centre, boasting 14 daily papers and complete monopoly of the periodical field.

Several large dailies are produced in provincial towns, nine of which have four each; so are a number of weekly and twice-weekly papers which provide an important news service to outlying areas. An important feature of the daily press is the large amount of space devoted to foreign news and also to commentary.

In 1970 there were 115 daily newspapers in Finland with a total circulation of more than 2,400,000. Fourteen of these dailies are printed in Swedish. A further 121 small local non-daily papers are also registered.

In order of circulation the most popular daily papers are: Helsingin Sanomat (283,000), Aamulehti (115,000), Turun Sanomat (108,000), Uusi Suomi (85,000), Hufvudstads-bladet in Swedish (67,000) and Iltä-Sanomat (70,000). Those most respected for their standard of news coverage and commentary are Helsingin Sanomat, an independent paper able to devote six of its twenty pages to advertising, and the smaller conservative Uusi Suomi.

Where periodicals and magazines are concerned there are signs of concentration. Two of the largest companies, under joint management (Yhtyneet Kuvalehdet Oy and Valiolehdet Oy), publish seventeen periodicals with a total circulation of 750,000 copies. Consumer co-operatives and other organizations are very important publishers and use their periodicals as information media for both their members and their customers. Thus two co-operative leagues produce the weekly Me Kuluttajat (265,000) and Yhteishyvä (385,448).

There are 1,330 periodicals of which some 300 are in the nation's second language, Swedish. Among the leading weekly periodicals are the general interest Apu (255,000) and the illustrated news magazines Suomen Kuvalehti (117,000) and Viikkosanomat (63,333). The publications of the consumer co-operatives enjoy large circulations (the largest Pirkka (442,479) is distributed free) as do the chief women's magazines Me Naiset (214,000) and Kotoliesi (173,372). The more popular serious magazines include the fortnightly Pellervo specialising in economic affairs and Valitut Palat (the Finnish Readers' Digest).

FINANCE

Finland has had its own monetary system since 1860. The Central Bank suspended the redemption of bank notes in gold in 1931, and at the end of 1962 this redemption was totally abolished. On 1st January 1963 the exchange rate for the Finnish mark was raised by 100 per cent, and in October 1967 the mark was again devalued, this time by 31½ per cent. Finland has been a member of the International Monetary Fund since 1948.

The Bank of Finland is the Bank of Issue under the guarantee and supervision of Parliament. Its Board of Management is appointed by the President of the Republic and the nine Bank Supervisors are elected by Parliament.

The Bank of Finland has very close connections with the central banks of the other Nordic countries and in 1962 an agreement was signed on short-term credits between these countries.

In 1970 there were two large and five small commercial banks with 825 offices in the country. At that time Finland also had 327 savings banks.

An important part is played in the financial activities of the country by Co-operative banks. In 1970 there were 445 Co-operative banks and six mortgage societies. The savings departments of all co-operative stores accept deposits from the public.

The Post Office Savings Bank is also extremely important in the life of the country. It collects the petty savings from the public through the 2,997 local post offices, the 13 offices of the Bank of Finland, as well as through its own head office and 14 branches. The National Pension Institute and 62 private insurance companies also granted credits in 1970.

FRANCE

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Republic of France is situated in Western Europe and bounded to the north by the English Channel, to the east by Belgium, Luxembourg, the German Federal Republic, Switzerland and Italy, to the south by the Mediterranean and Spain and to the west by the Atlantic Ocean. Climate is temperate throughout most of the country but in the south it is of the Mediterranean type with warm summers and mild winters. The language is French. Out of a total population of some 50 million, 90 per cent are Roman Catholics. There are also other Christian, Jewish and Muslim communities. The flag carries three vertical bands of blue, white and red. The capital is Paris.

Recent History

After the liberation in 1944 there was provisional unicameral government under General de Gaulle. In 1946, following a referendum, the Fourth Republic was set up with the legislature composed of the National Assembly and the Council of the Republic. General de Gaulle retired from public life. Twenty-six cabinets were formed during the life of the Fourth Republic which came to an end in 1958 with an insurrection in Algiers and the threat of civil war facing the country. Invited by President Coty to form a government, General de Gaulle was invested as Prime Minister to rule by decree for six months. In September 1958, by an overwhelming majority in a referendum, a new constitution introducing important changes was adopted and the Fifth Republic came into being with General de Gaulle as its President. In 1962 General de Gaulle's decision to have future Presidents of the Republic elected by direct universal suffrage was taken as a breach of the Constitution. The Government was defeated by a no-confidence vote and resigned. A referendum to decide the Presidential issue and the elections for a new government were held in the autumn of 1962. They resulted in victory for de Gaulle, who remained in power until April 27th, 1969. Having survived student and industrial unrest in 1968 which forced economic and educational reforms from the Government, he resigned following the defeat of the Referendum concerning Reform of the Senate and Regionalism. Under de Gaulle, France, as well as being leader of the EEC, became a nuclear power and followed an independent policy with regard to the U.S.A. and the Soviet Union. The era of de Gaulle was to a large extent an assertion of France's Great Power status and national prestige. His death in 1970 was deeply mourned.

Following de Gaulle's resignation, Alain Poher, as President of the Senate, became President of the Republic ad interim (cf. Constitution), pending Presidential elections. Georges Pompidou was elected President in June 1969 defeating Alain Poher in a second ballot. A new Government was formed on June 22nd under Jacques Chaban-Delmas.

The Government has maintained a large Parliamentary majority with two other parties as coalition partners of the Gaullist UDR, and has gradually transferred the political allegiance of Gaullists from their former exceptional leader to the support of a more traditionally-based political party. The Majority also successfully defeated the challenge of Jean-Jacques Servan-Schreiber, now President of the Radical Socialist Party, and his reform movement at the by-elections in the summer of 1970. The majority also registered gains in the 1971 senatorial elections. In autumn 1971, some of the opposition parties of the Left and Centre made fresh initiatives to combine their electoral forces. The issue of Regional Reform and redistribution of power between Paris and the Provinces has been taken up by de Gaulle's successors, though with more caution. Two reforms put forward in 1971 included a reduction of France's large number of small communes (District Councils) and the replacement of existing regional consultative assemblies by two differentiated assemblies for each of the 21 administrative regions, one having a degree of control over local economic planning, the other having a purely consultative role. These reforms are expected to become effective after 1973. Meanwhile, industrial investment in the regions is being pursued more vigorously than the decentralization of government.

President Pompidou visited Russia in 1970, and increased economic co-operation between the two countries was generally agreed upon. The Soviet leader, Mr. Brezhnev, in turn visited France in October 1971; his visit was preceded by that of a commercial delegation from the People's Republic of China. Under the present government France has continued to follow the independent policy that was launched by de Gaulle, while maintaining close economic relations with her allies and playing a leading role in European affairs.

Overseas, France granted independence to most of her former colonies after the Second World War. In Indo-China, after prolonged fighting, Laos, Cambodia and Viet-Nam became fully independent in 1954. In Africa most of the French colonies in the West and Equatorial regions attained independence between 1960 and 1961. Algeria became independent after a war lasting seven years, from 1955 to 1962, between French forces and the Front de Libération Nationale (FLN) based on Tunis, during which a French colonists' movement, the OAS, fought clandestinely against the Algerians and against France's decision to leave Algeria. In 1962 an agreement was finally signed at Evian between France and the Algerian nationalist leaders. French forces were withdrawn from Algeria and nearly all the many French settlers decided to leave the country. France has, however, continued to give Algeria economic aid. Franco-Algerian relations have deteriorated in recent years, especially since Algeria nationalized French petroleum assets in February 1971, but many Algerians, together with nationals from some of France's other ex-colonies, come annually to work in France, and trade between the two countries continues.

All the former colonies in Africa, excepting only Guinea, continue their close association with France, most remaining members of the Franc Zone. They receive considerable economic aid and technical assistance from France as well as a guaranteed market for their exports. Much aid is also channelled to these territories through the Overseas Development Fund of the EEC.

Government

According to the Constitution of 1958 the executive is composed of the President of the Republic and of a Council of Ministers headed by the Prime Minister. Legislative power is exercised by Parliament composed of a National Assembly and a Senate. The National Assembly is elected by direct adult suffrage for a term of five years. Senators are elected for a nine-year term by an electoral college. One third of the Senate membership is renewable every three years. By an amendment following a national referendum in 1962 the President is henceforth elected not by an electoral college as hitherto but by direct universal suffrage for seven years. The local government areas were reformed in March 1964, when Metropolitan France was divided into 21 administrative regions containing 95 departments.

Defence

French military policy is decided by the Supreme Defence Council. Under a decree of January 1964, President Pompidou, as Chairman of the Council, has direct responsibility for command of the French nuclear forces in case of atomic warfare. Military service is compulsory and lasts for 12–15 months. Liability for service lasts from the twentieth to the thirty-seventh year. In 1971 the strength of the armed forces stood at 501,500 comprising: Army 329,000, Navy 68,500, and Air Force 104,000. Nuclear tests have been carried out in the Sahara and Pacific and will be continued. France withdrew from the military side of NATO during 1967. The defence budget totalled 28,873 million francs for 1971, and 168,500 million francs for 1971–75.

Economic Affairs

France is still West Europe's leading agricultural country with more than three-quarters of its area under cultivation, although agriculture has lost its dominant place in the economy. Production was valued at 51,530 million francs in 1968, while the agricultural working population represented 14.9 per cent of the total working population. Cereals, fruit, vegetables, livestock, butter and cheese are abundantly produced, and national consumption of these commodities is very high. The share of animal products in total agricultural production was 58.5 per cent in 1968. French wines are an important export. More than half of the land is worked by owner-occupiers, and a third by tenant-farmers.

Since the Second World War French industry has expanded extremely rapidly. In 1946 the Commissariat Général du Plan (General Planning Office) was set up, the rôle of which is to co-ordinate projects initiated by other departments. Subsidiary to the General Commissariat are the Modernisation Commissions which elaborate individual plans. Every major field of industry is affected by the Commissions and particular progress has been made in electronics, transport, the processing industries and housing. To encourage expansion the Government offers public loans, tax relief and development incentives in certain areas. A wide variety of services such as fashion, catering and tourism play an important part in the French economy.

France's principal trade partners are the other countries of the Common Market, the German Federal Republic, Benelux and Italy. The largest French industries are steel (over 22 million tons per year), motor vehicles (two and a half million were produced in 1969), aircraft, mechanical and electrical engineering, textiles and chemicals. Large quantities of coal and iron ore are mined. France possessed valuable oil interests in the Sahara (now a part of Algeria) which are now exploited according to Franco-Algerian agreement.

France has greatly increased its exports in recent years—in the year 1969–70, exports of armaments increased six times—and also supplies much technical advice, sending experts all over the world to advise on development projects. It provides massive grants and loans to under-developed countries.

The franc was devalued by 12.5 per cent in August 1969, following the heavy drain on the reserves caused by the General Strike in 1968, and was accompanied by a rigid budgetary programme and credit restrictions. As a result, it has been possible to combine since then a steady rate of growth with a balance of expenditure and revenue. Despite monetary uncertainty following the American imposition of a 10 per cent import surcharge in September 1971, and the need to curb inflation, the draft budget for 1972, announced in September 1971, was designed to maintain a high rate of growth. This budget gave priority to investment in public works, to increase by more than 20 per cent over 1970; over half a million were unemployed in January 1972. At the same time, the rise in prices was to be controlled at a rate of 0.3 per cent a month.

Industrial expansion is being aided by a high level of public investment in services, amenities and regional development, and by reforms of working practices in many industrial concerns. A policy of paying labour by monthly salary instead of by hourly rates is being instituted nationally. Despite recurrent industrial relations problems in many sectors, the French economy is expected to be strong enough to withstand the future impact of an enlarged EEC. France played an important part in seeking a solution to the international monetary crisis of late 1971.

Transport

After the last war France had to reconstruct much of its railway system. Now there are about 40,000 kilometres of lines and French trains hold world records for speed. There are some 800,000 kilometres of highway, including 80,000 kilometres of national roads. A network of motorways is under construction and in 1965 the tunnel under Mont Blanc, linking France and Italy, was officially opened. Air France, one of the world's largest airlines, maintains many internal and external services. The French merchant marine totalled 3,360 vessels of over 5,921,000 tons in 1970.

Social Welfare

France has evolved an outstandingly comprehensive system of social security which is compulsory for all wage-earners, and latterly for farmers. State insurance requires contributions from both employers and employees, and provides for sickness, unemployment, maternity, disability through industrial accident and substantial allowances for large families. War veterans receive pensions and certain privileges, and widows the equivalent of three months' salary and pension. 80 per cent of all medical practitioners adhere to the state scheme. The patient pays directly for medical treatment and prescribed medicines, and then obtains reimbursement for all or part of the cost. Sickness benefits and pensions are related to the insured person's income and the length of time he has been insured. About one-fifth of the net national product is spent in health and welfare services.

Education

France is divided into 23 educational districts called Académies, each responsible for the administration of education from primary to higher in its area.

Education is compulsory and free from the age of 6-16. At 11 all pupils enter the first cycle of the Enseignement Secondaire with a four-year general course. At the age of 15 they may then proceed to the second cycle choosing between the cycle long leading to the baccalauréat after three years and the cycle court leading to the brevet d'études professionnelles after two years with commercial, administrative, or industrial options. French secondary education has been academically formal with nationally uniform syllabuses and little contact between teacher and pupil. Disturbances erupted in the Lycées during and since 1968, since when reforms have been effected in the governing and disciplinary machinery of schools. A more fundamental reform, begun in 1963, entailed the gradual abolition of junior classes in the Lycées and the institution in their place of new junior comprehensives, Collèges d'Enseignement Secondaire, designed to narrow the gap between the Lycée and the previous alternative, the Collège d'Enseignement Général. Those who fail the rigorous Baccalauréat may follow other professional or technical options lasting one or two years.

The minimum qualification for entry to University faculties is the baccalauréat. The first degree, the licence, is obtained after three years of study, and the master's degree (maîtrise) and doctorate after four and five years respectively. The prestigious Grandes Ecoles complement the universities; entry to them is by competitive examination, and they have traditionally supplied France's administrative élite. The university population increased nearly threefold between 1960 and 1968, and the universities, despite considerable growth, failed to keep abreast of the expansion of numbers. The 1968 reforms in higher education aimed to increase university autonomy and render teaching methods less formal. Overcrowding and the lack of career outlets remain among other problems, however, and it is estimated that something like 70 per cent of university entrants do not complete their courses. University grants are rare and average about 3,000 francs.

Primary school teachers are trained in Ecoles Normales d'Instituteurs. Secondary school teachers must have a licence or maîtrise. They may also sit competitive state examinations to obtain the Certificat d'Aptitude au Professorat de l'Etude (CAPES), or Agrégation. The Government is planning to establish new institutions for the training of secondary school teachers undertaking degree courses.

Expenditure on national education was 29.7 million francs in 1971, an increase of 14 per cent on that of 1970, representing 17.9 per cent of the national budget. It was the highest single budget for a Government Department, and went principally to the increase of the teaching staff.

Tourism

France draws tourists from all over the world. Paris is famous for its boulevards, historic buildings, theatres, art treasures, fashion houses and restaurants, and for its many music halls and night clubs. The Mediterranean and Atlantic coasts and the French Alps are the most popular tourist resorts but holidaymakers are to be found during the summer nearly everywhere. There are many ancient towns, the châteaux of the Loire, the fishing villages of Brittany and Normandy, and spas and places of pilgrimage such as Vichy and Lourdes. Corsica also attracts many tourists. Gastronomy is a tourist attraction throughout France. Following the growth of Spanish tourism, extensive tourist development has taken place in the Languedoc-Roussillon region; six new coastal resorts have been created by State and private enterprise to provide facilities for the increasing number of French tourists (growing to an estimated 40 million by 1985). This development is also expected to bring renewed prosperity to this hitherto neglected area. In 1969, 12 million foreign tourists visited France.

Visas are not required for nationals of the following countries: Algeria, Andorra, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Belgium, Bolivia, Brazil, Cameroon, Canada, Central African Republic, Ceylon, Chad, Chile, Colombia, Congo (Brazzaville), Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Dahomey, Denmark, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, Finland, Gabon, German Federal Republic, Greece, Haiti, Honduras, Iceland, Ireland, Ivory Coast, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Laos, Liechtenstein, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malaysia, Mali, Mauritania, Mexico, Monaco, Morocco, The Netherlands, New Zealand, Niger, Norway, Pakistan, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Portugal, San Marino, Senegal, Singapore, South Africa, South Korea, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, United Kingdom and Dependencies, U.S.A., Upper Volta, Uruguay, Vatican.

Sport

There is a National Sports Council to advise the Government on policy regarding sport. The State makes its contribution to the development of popular education and sport through the Secretariat of State for Youth and Sports. There are 20,000 sports clubs with over two million members. Football and rugby are the two most popular games.

Public Holidays

1972: April 13 (Easter Monday), May 1 (Labour Day), May 11 (Ascension Day), May 22 (Whit Monday), July 14 (Fall of the Bastille), August 15 (Assumption), November 1 (All Saints' Day), November 11 (Armistice Day), December 25 (Christmas Day).

1973: January 1 (New Year's Day).

THE CONSTITUTION OF THE FIFTH REPUBLIC

Adopted by referendum, September 28th, 1958.

Preamble

The French people hereby solemnly proclaims its attachment to the Rights of Man and to the principles of national sovereignty as defined by the Declaration of 1789, confirmed and complemented by the Preamble of the Constitution of 1946.

By virtue of these principles and that of the free determination of peoples, the Republic hereby offers to the Overseas Territories that express the desire to adhere to them, new institutions based on the common ideal of liberty, equality and fraternity and conceived with a view to their democratic evolution.

Article 1. The Republic and the peoples of the Overseas Territories who, by an act of free determination, adopt the present Constitution thereby institute a Community.

The Community shall be based on the equality and the solidarity of the peoples composing it.

Chapter I.—On Sovereignty

Article 2. France shall be a Republic, indivisible, secular, democratic and social. It shall ensure the equality of all citizens before the law, without distinction of origin, race or religion. It shall respect all beliefs.

The national emblem shall be the tricolour flag, blue, white and red.

The national anthem shall be the "Marseillaise".

The motto of the Republic shall be "Liberty, Equality, Fraternity".

Its principle shall be government of the people, by the people, and for the people.

Article 3. National sovereignty belongs to the people, which shall exercise this sovereignty through its representatives and through the referendum.

No section of the people, nor any individual, may attribute to themselves or himself the exercise thereof.

Suffrage may be direct or indirect under the conditions stipulated by the Constitution. It shall always be universal, equal and secret.

All French citizens of both sexes who have reached their majority and who enjoy civil and political rights may vote under the conditions to be determined by law.

Article 4. Political parties and groups may compete for votes. They may form and carry on their activities freely. They must respect the principles of national sovereignty and of democracy.

Chapter II.—The President of the Republic

Article 5. The President of the Republic shall see that the Constitution is respected. He shall ensure, by his arbitration, the regular functioning of the public powers, as well as the continuity of the State.

He shall be the guarantor of national independence, of the integrity of the territory, and of respect for Community agreements and for treaties.

Article 6. The President of the Republic shall be elected for seven years by direct universal suffrage. The method of implementation of the present article shall be determined by an organic law.

Article 7. The President of the Republic shall be elected by an absolute majority of the votes cast. If such a majority is not obtained at the first ballot, a second ballot shall take place on the second following Sunday. Those who may stand for the second ballot shall be only the two candidates who, after the possible withdrawal of candidates with more votes, have gained the largest number of votes on the first ballot.

Voting shall begin at the summons of the Government. The election of the new President of the Republic shall take place not less than twenty days and not more than thirty-five days before the expiration of the powers of the President in office. In the event that the Presidency of the Republic has been vacated for any reason whatsoever, or impeded in its functioning as officially declared by the Constitutional Council, after the matter has been referred to it by the Government and which shall give its ruling by an absolute majority of its members, the functions of the President of the Republic, with the exception of those covered by Articles 11 and 12 hereunder, shall be temporarily exercised by the President of the Senate and, if the latter is in his turn unable to exercise his functions, by the Government.

In the case of vacancy or when the impediment is declared to be final by the Constitutional Council, the voting for the new President shall take place, except in case of force majeure officially noted by the Constitutional Council, not less than twenty days and not more than thirty-five days after the beginning of the vacancy or of the declaration of the final nature of the impediment.

Articles 49 and 50 and Article 89 of the Constitution may not be put into application during the vacancy of the Presidency of the Republic or during the period between the declaration of the final nature of the impediment of the President of the Republic and the election of his successor.

Article 8. The President of the Republic shall appoint the Premier. He shall terminate the functions of the Premier when the latter presents the resignation of the Government.

At the suggestion of the Premier, he shall appoint the other members of the Government and shall terminate their functions.

Article 9. The President of the Republic shall preside over the Council of Ministers.

Article 10. The President of the Republic shall promulgate the laws within fifteen days following the transmission to the Government of the finally adopted law.

He may, before the expiration of this time limit, ask Parliament for a reconsideration of the law or of certain of its articles. This reconsideration may not be refused.

Article 11. The President of the Republic, on the proposal of the Government during [Parliamentary] sessions, or on joint motion of the two Assemblies published in the Journal Officiel, may submit to a referendum any bill dealing with the organization of the public powers, entailing approval of a Community agreement, or providing for authorization to ratify a treaty that, without being contrary to the Constitution, might affect the functioning of the institutions.

When the referendum decides in favour of the bill, the President of the Republic shall promulgate it within the time limit stipulated in the preceding article.

Article 12. The President of the Republic may, after consultation with the Premier and the Presidents of the

FRANCE—(THE CONSTITUTION)

Assemblies, declare the dissolution of the National Assembly.

General elections shall take place twenty days at the least and forty days at the most after the dissolution.

The National Assembly shall convene by right on the second Thursday following its election. If this meeting takes place between the periods provided for ordinary sessions, a session shall, by right, be opened for a fifteen-day period.

There may be no further dissolution within a year following these elections.

Article 13. The President of the Republic shall sign the ordinances and decrees decided upon in the Council of Ministers.

He shall make appointments to the civil and military posts of the State.

Councillors of State, the Grand Chancellor of the Legion of Honour, Ambassadors and Envoys Extraordinary, Master Councillors of the Audit Office, prefects, representatives of the Government in the Overseas Territories, general officers, rectors of academies [regional divisions of the public educational system] and directors of central administrations shall be appointed in meetings of the Council of Ministers.

An organic law shall determine the other posts to be filled in meetings of the Council of Ministers, as well as the conditions under which the power of the President of the Republic to make appointments to office may be delegated by him to be exercised in his name.

Article 14. The President of the Republic shall accredit Ambassadors and Envoys Extraordinary to foreign powers; foreign Ambassadors and Envoys Extraordinary shall be accredited to him.

Article 15. The President of the Republic shall be commander of the armed forces. He shall preside over the higher councils and committees of national defence.

Article 16. When the institutions of the Republic, the independence of the nation, the integrity of its territory or the fulfilment of its international commitments are threatened in a grave and immediate manner and the regular functioning of the constitutional public powers is interrupted, the President of the Republic shall take the measures required by these circumstances, after official consultation with the Premier and the Presidents of the Assemblies, as well as with the Constitutional Council.

He shall inform the nation of these measures in a message.

These measures must be prompted by the desire to ensure to the constitutional public powers, in the shortest possible time, the means of accomplishing their mission. The Constitutional Council shall be consulted with regard to such measures.

Parliament shall meet by right.

The National Assembly may not be dissolved during the exercise of exceptional powers.

Article 17. The President of the Republic shall have the right of pardon.

Article 18. The President of the Republic shall communicate with the two Assemblies of Parliament by means of messages, which he shall cause to be read, and which shall not be the occasion for any debate.

Between sessions, the Parliament shall be convened especially to this end.

Article 19. The acts of the President of the Republic, other than those provided for under Articles 8 (first paragraph), 11, 12, 16, 18, 54, 56 and 61, shall be countersigned by the Premier and, should circumstances so require, by the appropriate ministers.

Chapter III.—The Government

Article 20. The Government shall determine and conduct the policy of the nation.

It shall have at its disposal the administration and the armed forces.

It shall be responsible to the Parliament under the conditions and according to the procedures stipulated in Articles 49 and 50.

Article 21. The Premier shall direct the operation of the Government. He shall be responsible for national defence. He shall ensure the execution of the laws. Subject to the provisions of Article 13, he shall have regulatory powers and shall make appointments to civil and military posts.

He may delegate certain of his powers to the ministers.

He shall replace, should the occasion arise, the President of the Republic as the Chairman of the councils and committees provided for under Article 15.

He may, in exceptional instances, replace him as the chairman of a meeting of the Council of Ministers by virtue of an explicit delegation and for a specific agenda.

Article 22. The acts of the Premier shall be countersigned, when circumstances so require, by the ministers responsible for their execution.

Article 23. The functions of Member of the Government shall be incompatible with the exercise of any parliamentary mandate, with the holding of any office, at the national level, in business, professional or labour organizations, and with any public employment or professional activity.

An organic law shall determine the conditions under which the holders of such mandates, functions or employments shall be replaced.

The replacement of the members of Parliament shall take place in accordance with the provisions of Article 25.

Chapter IV.—The Parliament

Article 24. The Parliament shall comprise the National Assembly and the Senate.

The deputies to the National Assembly shall be elected by direct suffrage.

The Senate shall be elected by indirect suffrage. It shall ensure the representation of the territorial units of the Republic. Frenchmen living outside France shall be represented in the Senate.

Article 25. An organic law shall determine the term for which each Assembly is elected, the number of its members, their emoluments, the conditions of eligibility, and the system of ineligibilities and incompatibilities.

It shall likewise determine the conditions under which, in the case of a vacancy in either Assembly, persons shall be elected to replace the deputy or senator whose seat has been vacated until the holding of new complete or partial elections to the Assembly concerned.

Article 26. No Member of Parliament may be prosecuted, searched for, arrested, detained or tried as a result of the opinions or votes expressed by him in the exercise of his functions.

No Member of Parliament may, during parliamentary session, be prosecuted or arrested for criminal or minor offences without the authorisation of the Assembly of which he is a member except in the case of flagrante delicto.

When Parliament is not in session, no Member of Parliament may be arrested without the authorisation of the Secretariat of the Assembly of which he is a member, except in the case of flagrante delicto, of authorised prosecution or of final conviction.

FRANCE—(THE CONSTITUTION)

The detention or prosecution of a Member of Parliament shall be suspended if the Assembly of which he is a member so demands.

Article 27. Any compulsory vote shall be null and void.

The right to vote of the members of Parliament shall be personal.

The organic law may, under exceptional circumstances, authorize the delegation of a vote. In this case, no member may be delegated more than one vote.

Article 28. Parliament shall convene by right in two ordinary sessions a year.

The first session shall begin on the first Tuesday of October and shall end on the third Friday of December.

The second session shall open on the last Tuesday of April; it may not last longer than three months.

Article 29. Parliament shall convene in extraordinary session at the request of the Premier or of the majority of the members comprising the National Assembly, to consider a specific agenda.

When an extraordinary session is held at the request of the members of the National Assembly, the closure decree shall take effect as soon as the Parliament has exhausted the agenda for which it was called, and at the latest twelve days from the date of its meeting.

Only the Premier may ask for a new session before the end of the month following the closure decree.

Article 30. Apart from cases in which Parliament meets by right, extraordinary sessions shall be opened and closed by decree of the President of the Republic.

Article 31. The members of the Government shall have access to the two Assemblies. They shall be heard when they so request.

They may call for the assistance of Commissioners of the Government.

Article 32. The President of the National Assembly shall be elected for the duration of the legislature. The President of the Senate shall be elected after each partial re-election [of the Senate].

Article 33. The meetings of the two Assemblies shall be public. An in extenso report of the debates shall be published in the Journal Officiel.

Each Assembly may sit in secret committee at the request of the Premier or of one-tenth of its members.

Chapter V.—On Relations Between Parliament and the Government

Article 34. Laws shall be voted by Parliament.

They shall establish the regulations concerning:

Civil rights and the fundamental guarantees granted to the citizens for the exercise of their public liberties; the obligations imposed by the national defence upon the person and property of citizens;

Nationality, status and legal capacity of persons, marriage contracts, inheritance and gifts;

Determination of crimes and misdemeanours as well as the penalties imposed therefor; criminal procedure; amnesty; the creation of new juridical systems and the status of magistrates;

The basis, the rate and the methods of collecting taxes of all types; the issue of currency.

They likewise shall determine the regulations concerning:

The electoral system of the Parliamentary Assemblies and the local assemblies;

The establishment of categories of public institutions;

The fundamental guarantees granted to civil and military personnel employed by the State;

The nationalisation of enterprises and the transfers of the property of enterprises from the public to the private sector.

Laws shall determine the fundamental principles of:

The general organization of national defence;

The free administration of local communities, of their competencies and their resources;

Education;

Property rights, civil and commercial obligations;

Legislation pertaining to employment, unions and social security.

The financial laws shall determine the financial resources and obligations of the State under the conditions and with the reservations to be provided for by an organic law.

Laws pertaining to national planning shall determine the objectives of the economic and social action of the State.

The provisions of the present article may be detailed and supplemented by an organic law.

Article 35. Parliament shall authorise the declaration of war.

Article 36. Martial law shall be decreed in a meeting of the Council of Ministers.

Its prorogation beyond twelve days may be authorized only by Parliament.

Article 37. Matters other than those that fall within the domain of law shall be of a regulatory character.

Legislative texts concerning these matters may be modified by decrees issued after consultation with the Council of State. Those legislative texts which shall be passed after the entry into force of the present Constitution shall be modified by decree only if the Constitutional Council has stated that they have a regulatory character as defined in the preceding paragraph.

Article 38. The Government may, in order to carry out its programme, ask Parliament for authorisation to take through ordinances, during a limited period, measures that are normally within the domain of law.

The ordinances shall be enacted in meetings of Ministers after consultation with the Council of State. They shall come into force upon their publication but shall become null and void if the bill for their ratification is not submitted to Parliament before the date set by the enabling act.

At the expiration of the time limit referred to in the first paragraph of the present article, the ordinances may be modified only by the law in those matters which are within the legislative domain.

Article 39. The Premier and the Members of Parliament alike shall have the right to initiate legislation.

Government bills shall be discussed in the Council of Ministers after consultation with the Council of State and shall be filed with the secretariat of one of the two Assemblies. Finance bills shall be submitted first to the National Assembly.

Article 40. The bills and amendments introduced by the Members of Parliament shall be inadmissible when their adoption would have as a consequence either a diminution of public financial resources or an increase in public expenditure.

Article 41. If it shall appear in the course of the legislative procedure that a Parliamentary bill or an amendment is not within the domain of law or is contrary to a delegation granted by virtue of Article 38, the Government may declare its inadmissibility.

FRANCE—(THE CONSTITUTION)

In case of disagreement between the Government and the President of the Assembly concerned, the Constitutional Council, upon the request of one or the other, shall rule within a time limit of eight days.

Article 42. The discussion of bills shall pertain, in the first Assembly to which they have been referred, to the text presented by the Government.

An Assembly given a text passed by the other Assembly shall deliberate on the text that is transmitted to it.

Article 43. Government and Parliamentary bills shall, at the request of the Government or of the Assembly concerned, be sent for study to committees especially designated for this purpose.

Government and Parliamentary bills for which such a request has not been made shall be sent to one of the permanent committees, the number of which is limited to six in each Assembly.

Article 44. Members of Parliament and of the Government have the right of amendment.

After the opening of the debate, the Government may oppose the examination of any amendment which has not previously been submitted to committee.

If the Government so requests, the Assembly concerned shall decide, by a single vote, on all or part of the text under discussion, retaining only the amendments proposed or accepted by the Government.

Article 45. Every Government or Parliamentary bill shall be examined successively in the two Assemblies of Parliament with a view to the adoption of an identical text.

When, as a result of disagreement between the two Assemblies, it has been impossible to adopt a Government or Parliamentary bill after two readings by each Assembly, or, if the Government has declared the matter urgent, after a single reading by each of them, the Premier shall have the right to bring about a meeting of a joint committee composed of an equal number from both Assemblies charged with the task of proposing a text on the matters still under discussion.

The text elaborated by the joint committee may be submitted by the Government for approval of the two Assemblies. No amendment shall be admissible except by agreement with the Government.

If the joint committee does not succeed in adopting a common text, or if this text is not adopted under the conditions set forth in the preceding paragraph, the Government may, after a new reading by the National Assembly and by the Senate, ask the National Assembly to rule definitively. In this case, the National Assembly may reconsider either the text elaborated by the joint committee, or the last text voted by it, modified when circumstances so require by one or several of the amendments adopted by the Senate.

Article 46. The laws that the Constitution characterises as organic shall be passed and amended under the following conditions:

A Government or Parliamentary bill shall be submitted to the deliberation and to the vote of the first Assembly notified only at the expiration of a period of fifteen days following its introduction;

The procedure of Article 45 shall be applicable. Nevertheless, lacking an agreement between the two Assemblies, the text may be adopted by the National Assembly on final reading only by an absolute majority of its members;

The organic laws relative to the Senate must be passed in the same manner by the two Assemblies;

The organic laws may be promulgated only after a declaration by the Constitutional Council on their constitutionality.

Article 47. The Parliament shall pass finance bills under the conditions to be stipulated by an organic law.

Should the National Assembly fail to reach a decision on first reading within a time limit of forty days after a bill has been filed, the Government shall refer it to the Senate, which must rule within a time limit of fifteen days. The procedure set forth in Article 45 shall then be followed.

Should Parliament fail to reach a decision within a time limit of seventy days, the provisions of the bill may be enforced by ordinance.

Should the finance bill establishing the resources and expenditures of a fiscal year not be filed in time for it to be promulgated before the beginning of that fiscal year, the Government shall urgently request Parliament for the authorisation to collect the taxes and shall make available by decree the funds needed to meet the Government commitments already voted.

The time limits stipulated in the present article shall be suspended when the Parliament is not in session.

The Audit Office shall assist Parliament and the Government in supervising the implementation of the finance laws.

Article 48. The discussion of the bills filed or agreed upon by the Government shall have priority on the agenda of the Assemblies in the order determined by the Government.

One meeting a week shall be reserved, by priority, for questions asked by Members of Parliament and for answers by the Government.

Article 49. The Premier, after deliberation by the Council of Ministers, shall make the Government responsible, before the National Assembly, for its programme or, should the occasion arise, for a declaration of general policy.

When the National Assembly adopts a motion of censure, the responsibility of the Government shall thereby be questioned. Such a motion is admissible only if it is signed by at least one-tenth of the members of the National Assembly. The vote may not take place before forty-eight hours after the motion has been filed. Only the votes that are favourable to a motion of censure shall be counted; the motion of censure may be adopted only by a majority of the members comprising the Assembly. Should the motion of censure be rejected, its signatories may not introduce another motion of censure during the same session, except in the case provided for in the paragraph below.

The Premier may, after deliberation by the Council of Ministers, make the Government responsible before the National Assembly for the adoption of a vote of confidence. In this case, this vote of confidence shall be considered as adopted unless a motion of censure, filed during the twenty-four hours that follow, is carried under the conditions provided for in the preceding paragraph.

The Premier shall have the right to request the Senate for approval of a declaration of general policy.

Article 50. When the National Assembly adopts a motion of censure, or when it disapproves the programme or a declaration of general policy of the Government, the Premier must hand the resignation of the Government to the President of the Republic.

Article 51. The closure of ordinary or extraordinary sessions shall by right be delayed, should the occasion arise, in order to permit the application of the provisions of Article 49.

Chapter VI.—On Treaties and International Agreements

Article 52. The President of the Republic shall negotiate and ratify treaties.

He shall be informed of all negotiations leading to the conclusion of an international agreement not subject to ratification.

Article 53. Peace treaties, commercial treaties, treaties or agreements relative to international organization, those that commit the finances of the State, those that modify provisions of a legislative nature, those relative to the status of persons, those that call for the cession, exchange or addition of territory may be ratified or approved only by a law.

They shall go into effect only after having been ratified or approved.

No cession, no exchange, no addition of territory shall be valid without the consent of the populations concerned.

Article 54. If the Constitutional Council, the matter having been referred to it by the President of the Republic, by the Premier, or by the President of one or the other Assembly, shall declare that an international commitment contains a clause contrary to the Constitution, the authorisation to ratify or approve this commitment may be given only after amendment of the Constitution.

Article 55. Treaties or agreements duly ratified or approved shall, upon their publication, have an authority superior to that of laws, subject, for each agreement or treaty, to its application by the other party.

Chapter VII.—The Constitutional Council

Article 56. The Constitutional Council shall consist of nine members, whose mandates shall last nine years and shall not be renewable. One-third of the membership of the Constitutional Council shall be renewed every three years. Three of its members shall be appointed by the President of the Republic, three by the President of the National Assembly, three by the President of the Senate.

In addition to the nine members provided for above, former Presidents of the Republic shall be members ex officio for life of the Constitutional Council.

The President shall be appointed by the President of the Republic. He shall have the deciding vote in case of a tie.

Article 57. The office of member of the Constitutional Council shall be incompatible with that of minister or Member of Parliament. Other incompatibilities shall be determined by an organic law.

Article 58. The Constitutional Council shall ensure the regularity of the election of the President of the Republic. It shall examine complaints and shall announce the results of the vote.

Article 59. The Constitutional Council shall rule, in the case of disagreement, on the regularity of the election of deputies and senators.

Article 60. The Constitutional Council shall ensure the regularity of the referendum procedure and shall announce the results thereof.

Article 61. Organic laws, before their promulgation, and regulations of the parliamentary Assemblies, before they come into application, must be submitted to the Constitutional Council, which shall rule on their constitutionality.

To the same end, laws may be submitted to the Constitutional Council, before their promulgation, by the President of the Republic, the Premier or the President of one or the other Assembly.

In the cases provided for by the two preceding paragraphs, the Constitutional Council must make its ruling within a time limit of one month. Nevertheless, at the request of the Government, in case of urgency, this period shall be reduced to eight days.

In these same cases, referral to the Constitutional Council shall suspend the time limit for promulgation.

Article 62. A provision declared unconstitutional may not be promulgated or implemented.

The decisions of the Constitutional Council may not be appealed to any jurisdiction whatsoever. They must be recognised by the public powers and by all administrative and juridical authorities.

Article 63. An organic law shall determine the rules of organization and functioning of the Constitutional Council, the procedure to be followed before it, and in particular of the periods of time allowed for laying disputes before it.

Chapter VIII.—On Judicial Authority

Article 64. The President of the Republic shall be the guarantor of the independence of the judicial authority.

He shall be assisted by the High Council of the Judiciary.

An organic law shall determine the status of magistrates. Magistrates may not be removed from office.

Article 65. The High Council of the Judiciary shall be presided over by the President of the Republic. The Minister of Justice shall be its Vice-President ex officio. He may preside in place of the President of the Republic.

The High Council shall, in addition, include nine members appointed by the President of the Republic in conformity with the conditions to be determined by an organic law.

The High Council of the Judiciary shall present nominations for judges of the Court of Cassation [Supreme Court of Appeal] and for First Presidents of courts of appeal. It shall give its opinion under the conditions to be determined by an organic law on proposals of the Minister of Justice relative to the nominations of the other judges. It shall be consulted on questions of pardon under conditions to be determined by an organic law.

The High Council of the Judiciary shall act as a disciplinary council for judges. In such cases, it shall be decided over by the First President of the Court of Cassation.

Article 66. No one may be arbitrarily detained.

The judicial authority, guardian of individual liberty, shall ensure the respect of this principle under the conditions stipulated by law.

Chapter IX.—The High Court of Justice

Article 67. A High Court of Justice shall be instituted.

It shall be composed, in equal number, of members elected, from among their membership, by the National Assembly and by the Senate after each general or partial election to these Assemblies. It shall elect its President from among its members.

An organic law shall determine the composition of the High Court, its rules, as well as the procedure to be applied before it.

Article 68. The President of the Republic shall not be held accountable for actions performed in the exercise of his office except in the case of high treason. He may be indicted only by the two Assemblies ruling by identical vote in open balloting and by an absolute majority of the members of said Assemblies. He shall be tried by the High Court of Justice.

The members of the Government shall be criminally liable for actions performed in the exercise of their office and rated as crimes or misdemeanours at the time they were committed. The procedure defined above shall be applied to them, as well as to their accomplices, in case of a conspiracy against the security of the State. In the cases provided for by the present paragraph, the High Court shall be bound by the definition of crimes and misdemeanours, as well as by the determination of penalties, as they are established by the criminal laws in force when the acts are committed.

Chapter X.—The Economic and Social Council

Article 69. The Economic and Social Council, at the referral of the Government, shall give its opinion on the Government bills, ordinances and decrees, as well as on the Parliamentary bills submitted to it.

A member of the Economic and Social Council may be designated by the latter to present, before the Parliamentary Assemblies, the opinion of the Council on the Government or Parliamentary bills that have been submitted to it.

Article 70. The Economic and Social Council may likewise be consulted by the Government on any problem of an economic or social character of interest to the Republic or to the Community. Any plan, or any bill dealing with a plan, of an economic or social character shall be submitted to it for its advice.

Article 71. The composition of the Economic and Social Council and its rules of procedure shall be determined by an organic law.

Chapter XI.—On Territorial Units

Article 72. The territorial units of the Republic shall be the communes, the Departments, and the Overseas Territories. Any other territorial unit shall be created by law.

These units shall be free to govern themselves through elected councils and under the conditions stipulated by law.

In the Departments and the Territories, the Delegate of the Government shall be responsible for the national interests, for administrative supervision, and for seeing that the laws are respected.

Article 73. Measures of adjustment required by the particular situation of the Overseas Departments may be taken with regard to the legislative system and administrative organization of those Departments.

Article 74. The Overseas Territories of the Republic shall have a particular organization, taking account of their own interests within the general interests of the Republic. This organization shall be defined and modified by law after consultation with the Territorial Assembly concerned.

Article 75. Citizens of the Republic who do not have ordinary civil status, the only status referred to in Article 34, may keep their personal status as long as they have not renounced it.

Article 76. The Overseas Territories may retain their status within the Republic.

If they express the desire to do so by decision of their Territorial Assemblies taken within the time limit set in the first paragraph of Article 91, they shall become either Overseas Departments of the Republic or, organized into groups among themselves or singly, member States of the Community.

Chapter XII.—On the Community

Article 77. In the Community instituted by the present Constitution, the States shall enjoy autonomy; they shall administer themselves and, democratically and freely, manage their own affairs.

There shall be only one citizenship in the Community. All citizens shall be equal before the law, whatever their origin, their race and their religion. They shall have the same duties.

Article 78. The Community shall have jurisdiction over foreign policy, defence, the monetary system, common economic and financial policy, as well as the policy on strategic raw materials.

In addition, except by special agreement, control of justice, higher education, the general organization of external and common transport, and telecommunications shall be within its jurisdiction.

Special agreements may establish other common jurisdictions or regulate the transfer of jurisdiction from the Community to one of its members.

Article 79. The member States shall benefit from the provisions of Article 77 as soon as they have exercised the choice provided for in Article 76.

Until the measures required for implementation of the present title go into force, matters within the common jurisdiction shall be regulated by the Republic.

Article 80. The President of the Republic shall preside over and represent the Community.

The Community shall have, as organs, an Executive Council, a Senate and a Court of Arbitration.

Article 81. The member States of the Community shall participate in the election of the President according to the conditions stipulated in Article 6.

The President of the Republic, in his capacity as President of the Community, shall be represented in each State of the Community.

Article 82. The Executive Council of the Community shall be presided over by the President of the Community. It shall consist of the Premier of the Republic, the heads of Government of each of the member States of the Community, and of the ministers responsible for the common affairs of the Community.

The Executive Council shall organize the co-operation of members of the Community at Government and administrative levels.

The organization and procedure of the Executive Council shall be determined by an organic law.

Article 83. The Senate of the Community shall be composed of delegates whom the Parliament of the Republic and the legislative assemblies of the other members of the Community shall choose from among their own membership. The number of delegates of each State shall be determined, taking into account its population and the responsibilities it assumes in the Community.

The Senate of the Community shall hold two sessions a year, which shall be opened and closed by the President of the Community and may not last more than one month each.

The Senate of the Community, upon referral by the President of the Community, shall deliberate on the common economic and financial policy, before laws in these matters are voted upon by the Parliament of the Republic, and, should circumstances so require, by the legislative assemblies of the other members of the Community.

The Senate of the Community shall examine the acts and treaties or international agreements, which are specified in Articles 35 and 53, and which commit the Community.

The Senate of the Community shall take enforceable decisions in the domains in which it has received delegation of power from the legislative assemblies of the members of the Community. These decisions shall be promulgated in the same form as the law in the territory of each of the States concerned.

An organic law shall determine the composition of the Senate and its rules of procedure.

Article 84. A Court of Arbitration of the Community shall rule on litigations occurring among members of the Community.

Its composition and its competence shall be determined by an organic law.

Article 85. By derogation from the procedure provided for in Article 89, the provisions of the present title that concern the functioning of the common institutions shall be amendable by identical laws passed by the Parliament of the Republic and by the Senate of the Community.

The provisions of the present title may also be revised by agreements concluded between all states of the Community: the new provisions are enforced in the conditions laid down by the Constitution of each state.

Article 86. A change of status of a member State of the Community may be requested, either by the Republic, or by a resolution of the legislative assembly of the State concerned confirmed by a local referendum, the organization and supervision of which shall be ensured by the institutions of the Community. The procedures governing this change shall be determined by an agreement approved by the Parliament of the Republic and the legislative assembly concerned.

Under the same conditions, a Member State of the Community may become independent. It shall thereby cease to belong to the Community.

A Member State of the Community may also, by means of agreement, become independent without thereby ceasing to belong to the Community.

An independent State which is not a member of the Community may, by means of agreements, adhere to the Community without ceasing to be independent.

The position of these States within the Community is determined by the agreements concluded for that purpose, in particular the agreements mentioned in the preceding paragraphs as well as, where applicable, the agreements provided for in the second paragraph of article 85.

Article 87. The particular agreements made for the implementation of the present title shall be approved by the Parliament of the Republic and the legislative assembly concerned.

Chapter XIII.—On Agreements of Association

Article 88. The Republic or the Community may make agreements with States that wish to associate themselves with the Community in order to develop their own civilisations.

Chapter XIV.—On Amendment

Article 89. The initiative for amending the Constitution shall belong both to the President of the Republic on the proposal of the Premier and to the Members of Parliament.

The Government or Parliamentary bill for amendment must be passed by the two Assemblies in identical terms. The amendment shall become definitive after approval by a referendum.

Nevertheless, the proposed amendment shall not be submitted to a referendum when the President of the Republic decides to submit it to Parliament convened in Congress; in this case, the proposed amendment shall be approved only if it is accepted by a three-fifths majority of the votes cast. The Secretariat of the Congress shall be that of the National Assembly.

No amendment procedure may be undertaken or followed if it is prejudicial to the integrity of the territory.

The republican form of government shall not be the object of an amendment.

Chapter XV.—Temporary Provisions

Article 90. The ordinary session of Parliament is suspended. The mandate of the members of the present National Assembly shall expire on the day that the Assembly elected under the present Constitution convenes.

Until this meeting, the Government alone shall have the authority to convene Parliament.

The mandate of the members of the Assembly of the French Union shall expire at the same time as the mandate of the members of the present National Assembly.

Article 91. The institutions of the Republic, provided for by the present Constitution, shall be established within four months counting from the time of its promulgation.

This period shall be extended to six months for the institutions of the Community.

The powers of the President of the Republic now in office shall expire only when the results of the election provided for in Articles 6 and 7 of the present Constitution are proclaimed.

The member States of the Community shall participate in this first election under the conditions derived from their status at the date of the promulgation of the Constitution.

The established authorities shall continue in the exercise of their functions in these States according to the laws and regulations applicable when the Constitution goes into force, until the establishment of the authorities provided for by their new regimes.

Until its definitive constitution, the Senate shall consist of the present members of the Council of the Republic. The organic laws that shall determine the definitive constitution of the Senate must be passed before July 31st, 1959.

The powers conferred on the Constitutional Council by Articles 58 and 59 of the Constitution shall be exercised, until the establishment of this Council, by a committee composed of the Vice-President of the Council of State, as Chairman, the First President of the Court of Cassation, and the First President of the Audit Office.

The peoples of the member States of the Community shall continue to be represented in Parliament until the entry into force of the measures necessary to the implementation of Chapter XII.

Article 92. The legislative measures necessary to the establishment of the institutions and, until they are established, to the functioning of the public powers, shall be taken in meetings of the Council of Ministers, after consultation with the Council of State, in the form of ordinances having the force of law.

During the time limit set in the first paragraph of Article 91, the Government shall be authorised to determine, by ordinances having the force of law and passed in the same way, the system of elections to the Assemblies provided for by the Constitution.

During the same period and under the same conditions, the Government may also adopt measures, in all domains, which it may deem necessary to the life of the nation, the protection of citizens or the safeguarding of liberties.

ELECTORAL LAW, 1958

The Deputies of the National Assembly for Metropolitan France are elected under a single-member constituency system, with two ballots where the first does not produce an absolute majority. A candidate requires a simple majority in the second ballot to be successful. There are 465 individual constituencies, each with approximately 93,000 electors. Any candidate polling less than 5 per cent of the votes loses his deposit.

The Overseas Territories elect their representatives under the old system of proportional representation.

JUDICIAL SYSTEM

The Judiciary is independent of the Government. Judges of the Court of Cassation and the First President of the Court of Appeal are appointed by the executive from nominations of the High Council of the Judiciary.

Justices of the Peace (juges de paix) were abolished by the reforms of December 1958. Subordinate cases are now heard by Tribunals of Instance (tribunaux d'instance), of which there are 454, and more serious cases by Tribunals of Great Instance (tribunaux de grande instance), of which there are 175. Parallel to these Great Tribunals are the Tribunals of Commerce (tribunaux de commerce), for commercial cases, composed of judges elected by tradesmen and manufacturers among themselves. These do not exist in every district. Where there is no Tribunal of Commerce, commercial disputes are judged by Tribunals of Great Instance.

The Boards of Arbitration (Conseils de Prud'hommes) consist of an equal number of workers or employees and employers ruling on the differences which arise over Contracts of Work.

The Correctional Courts (Tribunaux correctionnels) for criminal cases corresponded to the Tribunal of Great Instance for civil cases. They pronounce on all graver offences (délits), including those involving imprisonment.

Offences committed by juveniles of under 18 years go before specialized tribunals: Tribunals for Children.

From all these Tribunals appeal lies to the Courts of Appeal (Cours d'Appel).

The Courts of Assize (Cours d'Assises) have no regular sittings, but are called when necessary to try every important case, for example, murder. They are presided over by judges who are members of the Courts of Appeal and composed of elected judges (jury). Their decision is final, except where shown to be wrong in law, and then recourse is had to the Court of Cassation (Cour de Cassation).

The Court of State Security (Cour de Sécurité de l'Etat) was instituted by two laws on January 15th, 1963. It consists, generally, of three civil magistrates, the President and two members being general or superior officers: this court has jurisdiction over crimes and misdemeanours against the Security of the State in peace time: its decisions are then sent to the Court of Cassation (Cour de Cassation).

The Court of Cassation is not a supreme court of appeal but a higher authority for the proper application of the law. Its duty is to see that judgments are not contrary either to the letter or the spirit of the law; any judgment annulled by the Court of Cassation involves the trying of the case anew by a court of the same category as that which made the original decision.

ADMINISTRATIVE JURISDICTION

Certain cases arising between civil servants (when on duty) and the government, or between any citizen and the government are judged by special administrative courts. The Administrative Tribunals (Tribunaux Administratifs) of which there are 22, are situated in the capital of each area; the Council of State (Conseil d'Etat), see below, has its seat in Paris.

Tribunal of Disputes (Tribunal des Conflits): Decides whether cases shall be submitted to the ordinary or the administrative courts. It is composed of: Pres. THE MINISTER OF JUSTICE; Vice-Pres. M. COSTA; four Counsellors of the Court of Cassation and three Counsellors of State.

Cour des Comptes (Court of Accounts), 13 rue Cambon, Paris 1er: is an administrative tribunal charged with judging the correctness of public accounts. It is the judge of common law of all public accounts laid before it. The judgments of the Court of Accounts may be annulled by the Council of State.

First President: M. PAYE.

THE PRESS

The French Press, distinguished for its vitality and variety, has enjoyed (since the fundamental legislation of 1881) a continuous period of freedom interrupted only by the two world wars. This detailed and liberal law affirmed the right of individuals to produce newspapers and provided penalties for such abuses as defamation and the publication of false news or matter liable to provoke crime. Article 26, which has been frequently invoked in recent years, penalizes matter judged to be offensive to the Head of State. In March 1968 the author and publisher of a pamphlet designed to make public the workings of Article 26 were both found guilty of insulting the President and were fined.

A number of amendments have been introduced modifying this legislation. In 1944 it was decreed that the owner of a daily or weekly newspaper stood legally responsible for it; the director of a daily with circulation of over 50,000 or of a weekly with circulation over 10,000 may not derive his main source of income from industrial or commercial holdings, and may not be director of more than one daily paper. In 1945 an order was introduced penalizing the dissemination of inaccurate news in bad faith so as to disturb the peace. A law in 1946 authorized the confiscation of property in cases of newspapers guilty of collaboration during the Occupation. The Law concerning papers for Children and Young People in 1949 prohibited editors from presenting in an attractive light "banditry, theft, laziness, cowardice, hatred, debauchery, criminal acts or acts liable to demoralize the young or inspire racial prejudice". The status of journalists was officially defined in the law of March 1935 which gave them certain privileges in such matters as holidays, salaries and protection against dismissal.

In addition to these pieces of legislation there are a number of articles in the Penal Code affecting the Press, sometimes quite harshly. Article 75 penalizes the disclosure of defence secrets, and Article 76 penalizes any disclosure of military intelligence not officially authorized.

All periodicals appearing regularly at least four times a year and all daily papers are exempt by law from turnover tax. This privilege, which amounts to a virtual subsidy, gives papers a degree of protection from the dangers of commercial competition.

Government control of the state radio and television service before May 1968 was exercised through the Inter-ministerial Liaison Service for Information (S.L.I.I.), which decided the items the broadcasting services could not cover and the official news they should cover. Such control came to be seen as increasingly restrictive during the crisis of May and June 1968 and, after some attempts by journalists working for the O.R.T.F. (Office de Radio et Télévision Française) to produce better coverage of developments in the streets and factories, a partial strike of O.R.T.F. employees which had begun on May 17th became a full-scale stoppage a week later. The strike lasted until July 13th, well after most of the other workers had ended their stoppages. During the crisis Le Monde's ability to provide exhaustive coverage almost doubled its circulation in a month, so that by the end of May its sales were up to 756,000. Although the figures later dropped, they still remain at 100,000 more than at the beginning of 1968. Other papers were less able to derive advantage from the O.R.T.F.'s lack of competition. Apart from the breakdown in the normal channels of distribution (which makes Le Monde's rise in circulation even more remarkable), papers like Figaro and Le Parisien Libéré also had to contend with stoppages in production when the printers considered editorials biased.

At the end of July 102 radio and television journalists who had taken part in the strike were dismissed "in the interests of greater efficiency". Other measures were taken to reorganize the O.R.T.F., such as the abolition of the S.L.I.I. However, the introduction of branded-goods advertising on television, beginning in October 1968, accelerated the trend towards concentration in the press; since most newspapers received at least half of their income from advertising and some, like Figaro, as much as 80 per cent. A further blow to the newspapers was the large increase in the cost of newsprint in 1971; in the first half of 1972 the newspapers will be given 15m. Frs. "exceptional assistance" to offset these costs. Militancy among the journalists' unions seemed likely to increase in the beginning of 1972 as widespread redundancies became imminent.

Between 1892 and 1966 the number of French dailies was reduced from 414 to 84, and the decrease has been especially marked since 1945.

No really large press groups have emerged, as in Britain or West Germany, mainly because of the importance of the provincial press, which is related in turn to the strength of the republican tradition, dating from the early days of the Third Republic, and the circumstances of the German occupation, which cut Paris off from the rest of France. Hence there are no really "national" newspapers in France. Two-thirds of the population read only provincial papers; and of the Paris papers only France-Soir and Le Parisien Libéré have circulations approaching one million, with their two closest rivals in Paris, Figaro and Le Monde, each remaining well below the 500,000 mark, although nearly half of these sales are outside the metropolis. The increasing financial insecurity and heavy dependence on advertising has forced many papers into various schemes of rationalization. Among provincial papers the trend has been towards advertising pools, and six groups have now been formed, each centred on one or two papers, covering most of the country. The agreement between Le Progrès de Lyon group and the Dauphiné Libéré group of Grenoble covers not only a unified advertising administration but also common printing arrangements and the use of common copy. Other papers have sought stability by allowing staff participation in the controlling companies. Thus Le Monde in March 1968 widened the block of shares distributed among its employees under the 1951 scheme to give its journalists a controlling interest in the company's capital; and Figaro's journalists claimed ultimate control over editorial decisions, and pressed their demands with a 24-hour strike in October 1968.

The weekly press has advanced strikingly in recent years, helped by the adoption of new formats and printing techniques and by the abandonment of specific political standpoints. The two best examples of this are L'Express, which remodelled itself on Time in 1964, and France-Observateur which became Le Nouvel Observateur at about the same time, improving its presentation considerably but still remaining committed to the Left.

In contrast to the situation before the war only three papers of the contemporary press are organs of political parties, L'Humanité (Communist), the tri-weekly Le Populaire (Socialist) and the Gaullist La Nation. All others are owned by individual publishers or by the powerful groups which have developed round either a company or a single personality. The major groups are as follows:

France Editions et Publications Group: 100 rue Réaumur, Paris 2e; France-Soir, Paris-Presse, le Journal du Dimanche, France-Dimanche, Elle, Le Jardin des Modes, Arts Ménagers, Scoop, Photogravure Réaumur. Imprimerie Réaumur have a 50 per cent holding in Télé-7-Jours.

Amateur Group (Dir.-Gen. CLAUDE BELLANGER): 124 rue Réaumur, Paris 2e; owns Le Parisien Libéré, the provincial dailies Le Courrier de l'Ouest, Le Maine Libre and the sports L'Equipe Maine, several weeklies, including Carrefour, and monthlies, including Marie-France. The group own three printing houses and two advertising agencies.

Prouvost Group (Pres. and Chief Editor JEAN PROUVOST): 51 rue Pierre Charron, Paris 8e; owns Paris-Match, Marie-Claire, la Maison de Marie Claire, Les Parents, a new magazine (1970) Ambre, a half-interest in Télé-7-Jours and a major owner in the Société du Figaro, which publishes Figaro, Figaro Littéraire, etc.

Del Duca Group: owns several popular magazines, including Nous Deux, Intimité, La Vie en Fleurs, Festival, and women's and children's journals, including Modes de Paris and Mireille; and also Paris-Jour, Télé-Poche and Femmes d'Aujourd'hui (Brussels). The group also owns factories and has extensions in Italy, Federal Germany and the United Kingdom.

Maison de la Bonne Presse: the largest Catholic Press Group in the world; owns the national Croix and all the provincial Croix, Le Pèlerin, Panorama Chrétien, important magazines for young people such as Record and Pomme d'Api, and monthlies, including Bible et Terre Sainte, Documentation Catholique, and youth and agricultural periodicals. The organization also owns two publishing houses and three printing works.

Filipacchi Group: devoted to teen-age and jazz fan readership; owns seven magazines including Salut les Copains, Mademoiselle Age Tendre, Lui, and Jazz Magazine.

Among the metropolitan dailies, the outstanding papers are Le Monde (354,643), which carries no pictures, and Le Figaro. The most popular are: France-Soir (880,564), Le Parisien Libéré (750,520), Le Figaro (434,077), and L'Aurore (408,800). The English language International Herald Tribune (113,924) is also a prominent feature. The major provincial dailies are Ouest-France published at Rennes (725,000), Le Progrès at Lyons (444,892), Le Dauphiné Libéré at Grenoble (371,350) and La Voix du Nord at Lille (421,706), which cater for rural readership by producing local subsidiary editions.

Metropolitan weekly papers range from the popular press, such as France Dimanche (1,450,000) and Ici Paris (1,100,000), through the more serious current affairs magazines like L'Express, Le Nouvel Observateur and the satirical Canard Enchaîné, to the literary and cultural Figaro Littéraire. Among the popular periodicals must be mentioned the weekly illustrated Paris-Match (1,500,000) and the women's journals Marie-Claire (1,200,000), Elle (730,000) and Marie-France (796,000).

RADIO AND TELEVISION

Office de Radiodiffusion et Télévision Française (ORTF): Maison de l'ORTF, 116 ave. du Président Kennedy, Paris 16e; f. 1939 as Radiodiffusion-Télévision Française (RTF), present name 1964; governed by an administrative Council of 24 members, 12 representatives of the Government and 5 ORTF staff; Pres. P. DE LÉUSSE; Dir.-Gen. J. J. DE BRESSON; Asst. Dir.-Gen. PIERRE-AIMÉ TOUCHARD; Dir. of Radio R. DHORDAIN; Dir. of Television P. SABBAGH, M. CAZENEUVE; the Government appointed PIERRE DESGRAUPES as Director of the autonomous news service of the first television network, and JACQUELINE BAUDRIER for the second television network.

The RTF was granted, in February 1959, a statute providing it with financial and administrative autonomy as a State public service under the Ministry of Information. By the reform of July 1964, the ORTF is no longer directly controlled by the Ministry of Information, though remaining under its tutelage. The ORTF holds a monopoly of all broadcasting in France and in the French Departments and Territories overseas. Commercial television was introduced in October 1968, allowing initially for only two minutes of advertisements per day on the first channel (since 1970 increased to eight).

RADIO

HOME SERVICES

France-Inter: Entertains and informs. Broadcasts transmitted for 24 hours a day; they can be received by 98 per cent of the population and by listeners outside France.

There are two main programmes, France-Inter and France-Inter Variétés. Other specialized and regional items are also produced.

Main transmitters for the two programmes: Allouis 1,829 metres; Nice I 193 metres.

France Culture: Serious programme on art, culture and thought; broadcasts can be received by 95 per cent of the population.

Seventeen medium-wave and forty-nine high fidelity transmitters.

France Musique: Transmission on frequency modulation transmitters. Nearly 95 per cent of the programme is devoted to music; there are regular stereophonic transmissions.

Forty-nine transmitters.

France-Inter is broadcast on long, medium and short waves and France-Inter Variétés is broadcast on medium wave and high fidelity (frequency modulated) transmitters.

Radio-Sorbonne: Low power transmission of educational programmes. Only available in the Paris region.

There are nine regional stations which relay Parisian programmes as well as regional broadcasts. Strasbourg radio includes daily broadcasts in German.

FOREIGN SERVICES

Broadcasts in French to French Polynesia, New Caledonia, New Hebrides, West and Equatorial Africa, Antarctica (Terre Adélie), Antilles, Guiana, St. Pierre-et-Miquelon, Indian Ocean and Africa.

Broadcasts to Europe in Bulgarian, English, French, Greek, Hungarian, Polish, Portuguese, Romanian, Russian, Serbo-Croat, Czech, Slovak, Slovenian, Spanish and Yiddish. Also to Canada (in French), Latin America (in French, Spanish and Portuguese). There are broadcasts in Arabic for Arabs not only in France, but also in North Africa and the Near East.

TELEVISION

There are two state-run channels.

On the first network transmission is on a 819-line system, and covers 95 per cent of the population.

There are 43 transmitting stations and about 1,040 low-powered relay stations.

The second network is on a 625-line system and about 70 per cent of the population can receive it.

There are 68 transmitting stations and about 286 low-powered relay stations.

Number of sets (Oct. 1970): 10,689,239.

Colour television, which was introduced in October 1967, is relayed for 35 hours per week on the second network. The SECAM system is used.

A third channel is being created and will be showing by 1972.

OVERSEAS TELEVISION SERVICE

Programmes are produced in Martinique, Guadeloupe, Guiana, Réunion, New Caledonia, Saint-Pierre et Miquelon, French Polynesia and French Afar and Issar Territory.

ROADS

There were about 785,171 km. of roads in France in 1970. Of these, some 81,200 km. are national roads, and 1,553 km. modern motorway (autoroute). There are also 698,000 km. of rural roads not included in these figures. In 1965 the Mont Blanc tunnel was officially opened. Motorway construction has continued recently, adding about 500 km. between 1969-70.

MOTORISTS' ASSOCIATIONS

- Fédération Nationale des Clubs Automobiles: 65 ave. d'Iéna, Paris 16e; f. 1970; 600,000 mems.; Pres. PIERRE BRUN; Sec.-Gen. DANIEL ROUX.

Automobile Club du Nord de la France: Head Office: 40-42 rue du Maréchal Foch, Roubaix; br. in Lille..
Automobile-Club de l'Ouest: Head Office: Circuit des 24 Heures, Le Mans; 28 brs. in central and western France; motor sport and tourism.

INLAND WATERWAYS

There were in 1970 approximately 8,215 km. of navigable waterways (including 4,814 km. of canals). Plans for expansion include the extension of the Grand-Canal d'Alsace, improvements in the Dunkirk-Lille and Dunkirk-Valenciennes services, and the construction of the Montélimar Canal. The French inland waterways fleet consists of some 3,600 small craft and canal craft, some 154 Rhine barges, and some 230 barges other than Rhine barges.

SHIPPING

In January 1969 French merchant shipping totalled 5,723,000 tons. Since June 1965 merchant seaports have been governed by a new statute setting up Autonomous Seaports. This statute took full responsibility away from the State and invested it in a Governing Board of 18-24 members and the Port Manager. The State retains supervisory powers.

ATOMIC ENERGY

Commissariat à l'Energie Atomique (Atomic Energy Commissariat): 29-33 rue de la Fédération, Paris 15e; f. 1945; High Commr. JACQUES YVON; Admin.-Gen. (Government Delegate) M. GIRAUD; Dir. of the Cabinet of the High Commissioner M. KOECHLIN; Inspector General M. ASTY.

The Commissariat is under the direct authority of the Prime Minister. It is a public corporation with administrative and financial autonomy, with responsibilities in scientific research, technical development and industry in the nuclear field.

Under the second five-year atomic energy plan (1957-61), it was arranged that the Commissariat should cease to have sole responsibility for atomic energy in France. This responsibility is now shared by other corporations (including Electricité de France) which are entrusted with the realization and exploitation of the main productions of nuclear electricity.

Administration is in the hands of a ten-member Comité de l'Energie Atomique (Atomic Energy Committee), consisting of government officials and representatives of science and industry.

Advisory Agencies to the Commissariat

Scientific Council: Pres. LOUIS DE BROGLIE.

Mines Committee: Pres. Prof. MARCEL ROUBAULT.

Industrial Equipment Committee: Pres. JEAN BLANCARD.

Advisory Commission for Nuclear Electricity Production:

Pres. JEAN COUTURE.

Markets: Pres. THÉODULE BOSSUAT.

There also functions within the Commissariat the following departments:

Délégué à la mission Matières Nucléaires (Directorate of Nuclear Materials): Dir. M. TARANGER.

Délégué à la mission Applications Militaires (Directorate of Military Uses): Dir. M. VIARD.

Délégué à la mission Recherche Fondamentale (Directorate of Fundamental Research): Dir. M. HOROWITZ.

Délégué à la mission Protection et Sécurité Nucléaires (Directorate of Radiological protection and security): Dir. M. GAUVENET.

Délégué à la mission Applications Industrielles Nucléaires (Directorate of Nuclear Industrial Applications): Dir. M. PECQUEUR.

Délégué à la mission Coopération Industrielle non Nucléaire (Directorate of non-Nuclear Industrial Co-operation): Dir. M. NOLLET.

Délégué à la mission Programmes d'Intérêt Général (Directorate of General Programmes: Dir. M. BALLIGAND.

Institut National des Sciences et Techniques Nucléaires (National Institute of Nuclear Science and Technology): B.P. 6, Gif-sur-Yvette (S.-et-O.); f. 1956; Dir. JEAN DEBIESE; Pres. Council of Instruction Rector MALLET.

Centre d'Etudes Nucléaires de Saclay (GENS) (Saclay Nuclear Research Centre): B.P. 2, 91 Gif-sur-Yvette; f. 1949; Dir. PAUL BONNET.

Centre d'Etudes Nucléaires de Fontenay-aux-Roses (Fontenay-aux-Roses Nuclear Research Centre): B.P. 6, Fontenay-aux-Roses (92); f. 1945; Dir. M. CHAUVEZ.

Centre d'Etudes Nucléaires de Grenoble (GEN-G) (Grenoble Nuclear Research Centre): CEDEX No. 85, 38 Grenoble/Gare; f. 1956; staff 2,600; basic and applied research; three swimming-pool open-core reactors (30 mW., 8 mW., 100 kW.); 40 laboratories; Dir. MAURICE PASCAL.

Centre d'Etudes Nucléaires de Cadarache (Cadarache Nuclear Research Station): B.P. 1, Saint-Paul-lès-Durance, Bouche-du-Rhône; f. 1960; Dir. R. FAURE.

The National Institute of Nuclear Science and Technology organizes courses on atomic engineering, special metallurgy and accelerator techniques, radio-biology, fluid behaviour in reactors, and theoretical physics. The four Research Centres are equipped with reactors, the Grenoble Centre having been established as a means of associating the universities with the advancement of nuclear science and avoiding the over-centralisation of research.

The Centre of Nuclear Studies at Cadarache is devoted to industrial nuclear research, both for electric generation and for propulsion. Fundamental research is also carried out in the fields of radiological safety, radio ecology and radioastronomy.

Centre National de la Recherche Scientifique (CERN): There are several nuclear research centres attached to this institution, and the largest nuclear laboratory complex is situated at Strasbourg.

Groupe de Laboratoires de Strasbourg-Cronembourg: rue du Loess, B.P. 20CR, 67 Strasbourg 3; f. 1957, Dirs. P. CUER, S. GORODETZKY, G. MONSonego; Mlle M. PEREV, A. COCHE, J. H. VIVIEN.

THE FEDERAL REPUBLIC OF GERMANY AND WEST BERLIN

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Federal Republic of Germany lies in the heart of Europe between 47° and 55° north latitude and 6° and 23° east longitude. Its neighbours to the west are the Netherlands, Belgium, Luxembourg and France, to the south Switzerland and Austria, to the east Czechoslovakia and the German Democratic Republic, and to the north Denmark. Its climate is temperate, with an average annual temperature of 48°F, although there are considerable variations between the North German lowlands and the Bavarian Alps. The language is German. Approximately half the population belongs to the Evangelical Church, 45 per cent to the Roman Catholic Church, and the remainder to smaller religious groups. The flag consists of three horizontal stripes of black, red and gold. The seat of Government is Bonn.

Recent History

After the defeat of the Third Reich in 1945, Germany was divided according to the Berlin Agreement into American, Soviet, British and French zones of occupation. In 1949 the zones occupied by the three Western Allies merged to become the Federal Republic of Germany, and the Soviet Zone shortly afterwards declared itself the German Democratic Republic. Following general elections, and the constitution of the Federal Republic, the military occupation was converted into a contractual defence relationship. The last of the limitations to the sovereignty of the Republic were removed in 1955, in which year it joined the Western European Union and NATO. The Saarland, which immediately after the war became economically tied to France as a semi-autonomous protectorate, once more became fully politically and economically integrated into the Federal Republic in 1959. Berlin was also, according to the Berlin agreement, divided into four zones of occupation. In 1949 Soviet occupied Berlin proclaimed itself capital of the German Democratic Republic, leaving the remainder, known as West Berlin, an island in G.D.R. territory. The pressures which could be brought to bear on West Berlin, now officially a Land of the Federal Republic, were proven by the Berlin Blockade of 1948-49. Consistent with the belief that the government of the Federal Republic is the only organ legally entitled to speak for Germany as a whole, and with the policy of re-unification, the Bundestag confirmed Berlin's status as capital of Germany in 1957. The seat of the Federal Government continues to be Bonn.

From considerable destruction inflicted by allied bombing and the last stages of the land war, the Federal Republic, which contains the principal industrial areas of Germany, rebuilt itself rapidly as one of the most affluent and economically dynamic states in Europe. The Wirtschaftswunder (Economic Miracle), which received much of its stimulus from Marshall Aid and European co-operation, began under the Chancellorship of Adenauer (1949-63) and the direction of Economics Minister Erhard, who subsequently became Chancellor following the retirement of Adenauer. The Federal Republic is a founder member of the EEC. The years of the Grand Coalition (C.D.U./C.S.U. and S.P.D.) under the Chancellorship of Kiesinger lasted from 1966 to 1969 and saw continuing prosperity with no change in the re-unification policy which aims at re-establishing a democratic Germany conforming to the 1937 borders of the Reich.

Although the C.D.U./C.S.U. gained more votes than any of the other parties in the general elections of October 1969, a coalition government of S.P.D. and F.D.P. was formed under the Chancellorship of Herr Brandt. Herr Scheel, leader of the F.D.P., became Foreign Minister. At the outset the coalition had a voting majority of 12 in the Bundestag. However, in October 1970 three F.D.P. representatives withdrew their support for the Government and joined the Opposition, mainly in disapproval of foreign policy, thus reducing the Government majority in the Bundestag to 6. The new Government has adopted a fresh policy towards Eastern Europe (Ostpolitik), and particularly towards the German Democratic Republic. During 1970 formal talks were conducted between the two countries for the first time in post-war German history, and there was a marked increase in diplomatic contacts between the Federal Republic and the other East Bloc states. An agreement over the supply of gas from the Soviet Union and trade agreements with Poland and Hungary preceded the signing of the Treaty on the Renunciation of Force with the Soviet Union in August, and the signing of a treaty with Poland in November 1970. The latter constitutes a reversal of the policy prior to Brandt's Chancellorship, in that it recognizes the Oder/Neisse Line as the border between Germany (actually the G.D.R.) and Poland, and renounces the former Federal German claims upon the Eastern territories of the old Reich. In 1971 there were lengthy talks between the four powers aimed at clarifying the position of West Berlin. An agreement was signed in September and was followed by negotiations between the two German governments and the authorities in West Berlin. These were concluded in December and provided for unimpeded access from the Federal Republic to West Berlin and for the citizens of West Berlin to be allowed to visit the G.D.R.

Government

The Federal Republic comprises ten states (Länder). The legislative organ is the Bundestag, which is elected for four years by universal suffrage. The Länder are represented in the legislature by the Bundesrat, whose members are appointed and recalled by the Länder themselves. In addition to the ten Länder West Berlin is represented in the Bundestag and in the Bundesrat in a consultative capacity.

The Federal Government, which is headed by a Chancellor elected by an absolute majority of the Bundestag, is responsible for the foreign affairs and defence of the Republic and for such matters as citizenship, migration, currency, customs, railways, posts and telecommunications.

Each of the Länder has its own parliament, which has the right to pass laws except in such matters as are the exclusive right of the Federation. Both education and police are in the control of the Länder.

Local responsibility for the execution of Federal and State Laws is undertaken by the Gemeinden (communes) and Landkreise (counties).

Defence

As a member of NATO and the Western European Union since 1955, Federal Germany undertook to supply twelve divisions, and formation of these was completed in 1964. After the United States, Germany is the second largest financial contributor towards NATO infrastructure. Conscription has been in force since 1956 and lasts for a period of eighteen months. However a Government Commission has proposed a reduction to sixteen months. In 1971 the strength of the Army stood at 327,000, including the 35,000 Territorial Forces, and there were 540,000 reserves. The Navy is 36,000 strong with the same number of reserves, and there were 104,000 in the Air Force with 87,000 reserves. Defence estimates for 1971 totalled 21,816 million DM. France and Great Britain co-operate with Federal Germany in combined training schemes and military exercises. In November 1969, the Federal Republic formally renounced the manufacture, acquisition, and use of nuclear weapons by signing the nuclear non-proliferation treaty.

Economic Affairs

Since the currency reform of 1948 the Federal Republic of Germany has entirely reconstructed its economy and is today the second largest trading nation in the world. Between 1950 and 1970 the fast economic growth of Federal Germany—frequently labelled as an "economic miracle"—at 6½ per cent was higher than in any other industrial country, except Japan. Agriculture, with about 90 per cent of its workers self-employed, contributes just under four per cent to the national product. Principal trade partners are the countries of the EEC, the U.S.A. and the U.K. Federal Germany is the world's largest vehicle exporter and cars are its most important export product, accounting for almost 18 per cent of its exports of manufactures.

In 1971, with growth at around 3-4 per cent, the Federal German economy was experiencing a downswing, beginning in the summer of 1970, after the longest and biggest boom in Germany's post-war history. Inflation, at an annual rate of nearly 6 per cent, was at a record level by German standards and presented the government with its most serious problem. The government's efforts to stabilize the economy have been frustrated by a direct external pull on prices. Although the discount rate was cut from 7½ to 5 per cent between July 1970 and April 1971 in an attempt to curb the huge inflow of foreign funds, this policy was unsuccessful and with the Bundesbank's foreign exchange reserves rising by about DM 40,000 million in little more than a year, swelling the money supply to inflationary proportions, the Mark was allowed to float in May 1971 in an attempt to restrict demand without inducing depression. However, the high rate of inflation was also the result of domestic factors. With new aggressiveness from the trade unions, effective wage and salary incomes rose by 15 per cent in 1970 and by around 12 per cent in 1971.

The floating of the Mark from May to December 1971, with its de facto revaluation of the Mark against the dollar of around 8 per cent and sometimes as much as 11 per cent, and the continuing high level of wage settlements, accentuated the economic downturn to produce rapidly falling profits in the export-orientated chemical and motor-car industries in 1971, with consequent cut-backs in investment. At the end of 1971 the number of unemployed stood at nearly 270,000, equivalent to 1.2 per cent of the labour force, the highest end-of-year level since 1968. It appeared that 1972 would be a year of low or negligible real growth, with unemployment rising slightly. Whilst recession did not appear probable at first, fear of it was mounting and in November 1971 the Government undertook to reflate the economy in the course of 1972 partly by relaxation of credit policy and partly by the release of funds which had been frozen by the Government during the recent boom.

Transport and Communications

The Federal Republic has a highly developed system of transport by rail, inland waterways, road and air. Over £5,000 million pounds were invested in the field of transport and communications between 1949 and 1960. Under a ten-year road-building plan 9,865 kilometres of Federal roads were constructed by 1969, and by the end of 1970 there were 416,000 kilometres of classified roads, including 4,460 kilometres of modern motorway (Autobahn). The railways have been modernized and the shipping fleet redeveloped after the run-down of the war and the immediate post-war years. The canals linking the rivers Rhine, Main and Danube are being widened and deepened to form a trading route linking the North Sea with the Black Sea. There are five international airports at Frankfurt, Berlin, Düsseldorf, Hamburg and Munich.

Social Welfare

Social legislation in the Federal Republic, tracing its origins back to 1881, provides insurance for health, accident, old-age, disability, and unemployment. The schemes for disability, old-age and unemployment insurance are compulsory for all employees, and over 80 per cent of the population is covered by national health insurance. More than 20 per cent of the expenditure of the Federal Budget goes to social security payments.

Education

The Basic Law gives the control of education entirely to the State governments. They do, however, co-operate quite closely to ensure a large degree of conformity in the system.

Education is compulsory from the end of the sixth to the eighteenth year, and nine years must be full-time. Primary education is free, and grants are made for secondary education wherever fees are payable. Attendance at the basic school (Grundschule) is obligatory for all children during the first four years of their school life, after which they may continue in the elementary school, as do 80 per cent of the pupils, or proceed to the intermediate school (Realschule) for six years or the high school (Gymnasium) for nine years. There are three types of High School, specializing in Classics, Modern Languages, and Mathematics and Science. A Gymnasium school-leaving certificate is a necessary prerequisite for University education. Those who stay in the elementary school complete their education by part-time attendance at a vocational school.

There are in the Federal Republic thirty universities and nine technical universities, as well as a number of colleges specializing in individual subjects.

Tourism

Germany's tourist attractions include spas, summer and winter resorts, mountains, the Rhineland, mediaeval towns and villages. In 1970 nearly eight million people visited Germany. There are more than one million beds available for tourists.

Receipts from tourism totalled 3,747 million DM in 1970.

Visas are not required for nationals of the following countries: Afghanistan, Andorra, Angola, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Belgium, Bolivia, Brazil, Burma, Burundi, Cameroon, Canada, Central African Republic, Ceylon, Chad, Chile, Colombia, Congo (Brazzaville), Costa Rica, Cyprus, Dahomey, Denmark, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Finland, France, Gabon, Ghana, Greece, Guadeloupe, Guam, Guinea, Honduras, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Japan, Kenya, Laos, Liberia, Libya, Liechtenstein, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Martinique, Mexico, Monaco, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, The Netherlands, New Caledonia, New Zealand,

Sport

Sport in the Federal Republic is highly organized, football and gymnastic clubs being extremely numerous. Other popular sports are athletics, shooting, handball, swimming, table tennis and tennis.

Public Holidays

1972: March 31 (Good Friday), April 3 (Easter Monday), May 1 (Labour Day), May 11 (Ascension Day), May 29 (Whit Monday), June 17 (Berlin Day), August 15 (Assumption), November 22 (Penitentiary Day), December 25, 26 (Christmas).

1973: January 1 (New Year's Day).

Weights and Measures

The Metric System is in force.

Currency and Exchange Rates

The principal currency unit is the Deutsche Mark (DM), which is divided into 100 Pfennigs.

Coins: 1, 2, 5, 10 and 50 Pfennigs; 1, 2, and 5 Deutsche Mark.

Notes: 5, 10, 20, 50, 100, 500 and 1,000 Deutsche Mark.

Exchange rate: 8.31 DM = £1 sterling

3.20 DM = $1 U.S.

THE CONSTITUTION

THE Basic Law of 1949 was and is intended as a provisional Constitution to serve until a permanent one for Germany as a whole can be drawn up. The Parliamentary Council which framed it set out to continue the tradition of the Constitution read out in the Paulskirche, in Frankfurt/Main, during the revolution of 1848-49, and to preserve some continuity with subsequent German constitutions (with Bismarck's Constitution of 1871, and with the Weimar Constitution of 1919) while avoiding the mistakes of the past. It contains 146 articles, divided into 11 sections, and introduced by a short preamble.

I. Basic Rights

The opening articles of the Constitution guarantee the dignity of man, the free development of his personality, the equality of all men before the law, and freedom of faith and conscience. Men and women shall have equal rights, and no one may be prejudiced because of sex, descent, race, language, homeland and origin, faith, or religions or political opinion.

No one may be compelled against his conscience to perform war service as a combatant (Art. 4). All Germans have the right to assemble peacefully and unarmed and to form associations and societies. Everyone has the right freely to express and to disseminate his opinion through speech, writing or pictures. Freedom of the press and freedom of reporting by radio and motion pictures are guaranteed (Art. 5). Censorship is not permitted.

The State shall protect marriage and the family property and the right of inheritance. The care and upbringing of children is the natural right of parents. Illegitimate children shall be given the same conditions for their development and their position in society as legitimate children. Schools are under the supervision of the State. Religion forms part of the curriculum in the State schools, but parents have the right to decide whether the child shall receive religious instruction (Art. 7).

A man's dwelling is inviolable; house searches may be made only by Court Order. No German may be deprived of his citizenship if he would thereby become stateless. The politically persecuted enjoy the right of asylum (Art. 16).

II. The Federation and the Länder

Article 20 describes the Federal Republic (Bundesrepublik Deutschland) as a democratic and social federal state. The colours of the Federal Republic are to be black-red-gold, the same as those of the Weimar Republic. Each Land within the Federal Republic has its own Constitution, which must, however, conform to the principles laid down in the basic law. All Länder, districts and parishes must have a representative assembly resulting from universal, direct, free, equal and secret elections (Art. 28). The exercise of the power of state is the concern of the Länder, in so far as the Basic Law does not otherwise prescribe. Where there is incompatibility, Federal Law supersedes Land Law (Art. 31). Every German has in each Land the same civil rights and duties.

Political parties may be freely formed in all the states of the Federal Republic, but their internal organization must conform to democratic principles, and they must publicly account for the sources of their funds. Parties which seek to impair or abolish the free and democratic basic order or to jeopardize the existence of the Federal Republic of Germany are unconstitutional (Art. 21). So are activities tending to disturb the peaceful relations between nations, and, especially, preparations for aggressive war, but the Federation may join a system of mutual collective security in order to preserve peace. The rules of International Law shall form part of Federal Law and take precedence over it and create rights and duties directly for the inhabitants of the Federal territory (Art. 25).

The territorial composition of the Länder shall be re-organized with due regard to regional unity, territorial and cultural connections, economic expediency and social structure.

III. The Bundestag

The deputies of the Lower House or Bundestag shall be elected by the people in universal, free, equal, direct and secret elections, for a term of four years.* Any person who has reached the age of 21 is eligible to vote and any person who has reached the age of 25 is eligible for election (Art. 38). A deputy may be arrested for a punishable offence only with the permission of the Bundestag, unless he be apprehended in the act or during the following day.

The Bundestag elects its President and draws up its Standing Orders. Most decisions of the House require a majority vote. Its meetings are public, but the public may be excluded by the decision of a two-thirds majority. Upon the motion of one-quarter of its members the Bundestag is obliged to set up an investigation committee.

IV. The Bundesrat

The Federal Council or Bundesrat is the Upper House through which the Länder participate in the legislation and the administration of the Federation. The Bundesrat consists of members of the Land governments, which can appoint and recall them (Art. 51). Each Land has at least three votes; Länder with more than two million inhabitants have four, and those with more than six million inhabitants have five. The votes of each Land may only be given as a block vote. The Bundesrat elects its President for one year. Its decisions are taken by simple majority vote. Meetings are in public, but the public may be excluded. The members of the Federal Government have the right, and, on demand, the obligation, to participate in the debates of the Bundesrat.

V. The Bundespräsident

The Federal President or Bundespräsident is elected by the Federal Convention (Bundesversammlung), consisting of the members of the Bundestag and an equal number of members elected by the Länder Parliaments (Art. 54). Every German eligible to vote in elections for the Bundestag and over 40 years of age is eligible for election. The candidate who obtains an absolute majority of votes is elected, but if such majority is not achieved by any candidate in two ballots, whoever receives most votes in a

* The elections of 1949 were carried out on the basis of direct election. But in January 1953, the draft of a new electoral law was completed by the Federal Government and passed shortly before the dissolution. The new law represents a compromise between direct election and proportional representation, and is designed to discourage the rise of many small parties.

FEDERAL GERMANY—(THE CONSTITUTION)

further ballot becomes President. The President's term of office is five years. Immediate re-election is admissible only once. The Federal President must not be a member of the Government or of any legislative body or hold any salaried office. Orders and instructions of the President require the counter-signature of the Federal Chancellor or competent Minister, except for the appointment or dismissal of the Chancellor or the dissolution of the Bundestag.

The President represents the Federation in International Law and accredits and receives envoys. The Bundestag or the Bundesrat may impeach the President before the Federal Constitutional Court on account of wilful violation of the Basic Law or of any other Federal Law (Art. 61).

VI. The Bundesregierung

The Federal Government (Bundesregierung) consists of the Federal Chancellor (Bundeschkanzler) and the Federal Ministers (Bundesminister). The Chancellor is elected by an absolute majority of the Bundestag on the proposal of the Federal President (Art. 63). Ministers are appointed and dismissed by the President upon the proposal of the Chancellor. Neither he nor his Ministers may hold any other salaried office. The Chancellor determines general policy and assumes responsibility for it, but within these limits each Minister directs his department individually and on his own responsibility. The Bundestag may express its lack of confidence in the Chancellor only by electing a successor with the majority of its members; the President must then appoint the person elected (Art. 67). If a motion of the Chancellor for a vote of confidence does not obtain the support of the majority of the Bundestag, the President may, upon the proposal of the Chancellor, dissolve the House within twenty-one days, unless it elects another Chancellor within this time (Art. 68).

VII. The Legislation of the Federation

The right of legislation lies with the Länder in so far as the Basic Law does not specifically accord legislative powers to the Federation. Distinction is made between fields of exclusive legislation of the Federation and fields of concurrent legislation of Bund and Länder. In the field of concurrent legislation the Länder may legislate so long and so far as the Federation makes no use of its legislative right. The Federation has this right only in so far as a matter cannot be effectively regulated by Land legislation, or the regulation by Land Law would prejudice other Länder, or if the preservation of legal or economic unity demands regulation by Federal Law. Exclusive legislation of the Federation is strictly limited to such matters as foreign affairs, citizenship, migration, currency, copyrights, customs, railways, post and telecommunications. In most other fields, as enumerated (Art. 74), concurrent legislation exists.

The legislative organ of the Federation is the Bundestag, into which Bills are introduced by the Government, by members of the Bundestag or by the Bundesrat (Art. 76). After their adoption they must be submitted to the Bundesrat, which may demand, within two weeks, that a committee of members of both houses be convened to consider the Bill (Art. 77). In so far as its express approval is not needed, the Bundesrat may veto a law within one week.

An alteration of the Basic Law requires a majority of two-thirds in both houses, but an amendment by which the division of the Federation into Länder and the basic principles contained in Articles 1 and 20 would be affected, is inadmissible (Art. 79).

The Federal Government or the Länder Governments may be authorized by law to issue ordinances. A state of legislative emergency for a Bill can be declared by the President on the request of the Government with the approval of the Bundesrat. If then the Bundestag again rejects the Bill, it may be deemed adopted nevertheless in so far as the Bundesrat approves it. An emergency must not last longer than six months and may not be declared more than once during the term of office of any one Government (Art. 81).

VIII. The Execution of Federal Laws and the Federal Administration

The Länder execute the Federal Laws as their own concern in so far as the Basic Law does not otherwise determine. In doing so, they regulate the establishment of the authorities and the administrative procedure, but the Federal Government exercises supervision in order to ensure that the Länder execute the Federal Laws in an appropriate manner. For this purpose the Federal Government may send commissioners to the Land authorities (Art. 84). Direct Federal administration is foreseen for the Foreign Service, Federal finance, Federal railways, postal services, Federal waterways and shipping.

In order to avert imminent danger to the existence of the democratic order, a Land may call in the police forces of other Länder; and if the Land in which the danger is imminent is itself not willing or able to fight the danger, the Federal Government may place the police in the Land, or the police forces in other Länder, under its instructions (Art. 91).

IX. The Administration of Justice

Judicial authority is invested in independent judges, who are subject only to the law and who may not be dismissed or transferred against their will (Art. 97).

Justice is exercised by the Federal Constitutional Court, by the Supreme Federal Court, by the Federal Courts and by the Courts of the Länder. The Federal Constitutional Court decides on the interpretation of the Basic Law in cases of doubt, on the compatibility of Federal Law or Land Law with the Basic Law, and on disputes between the Federation and the Länder or between different Länder. The Supreme Federal Court decides in cases where the decision is of importance for the uniformity of the administration of justice of the Higher Federal Courts. Higher Federal Courts are to be established for the spheres of ordinary, administrative, finance, labour and social jurisdiction. Extraordinary courts are inadmissible.

The freedom of the individual may be restricted only on the basis of a law. No one may be prevented from appearing before his lawful judge (Art. 101). Detained persons may be subjected neither to physical nor to mental ill-treatment. The police may hold no one in custody longer than the end of the day following the arrest without the decision of a court. Any person temporarily detained must be brought before a judge who shall inform him of the reasons of his arrest, at the latest on the following day. A person enjoying the confidence of the detainee must be notified forthwith of any continued duration of a deprivation of liberty. An act may be punished only if it was punishable by law before the act was committed, and no one may be punished more than once on account of the same criminal act. The death sentence shall be abolished.

X. Finance

The Federation has the right of exclusive legislation only on customs and financial monopolies; on most other taxes, especially on income, property and inheritance, it has concurrent legislation rights with the Länder (see VII above).

Customs, financial monopolies, excise taxes (with exception of the beer tax), the transportation tax, the turnover tax and property dues serving non recurrent purposes, are administered by Federal finance authorities, and the revenues thereof accrue to the Federation. The remaining taxes are administered, as a rule, by the Länder and the Gemeinden to which they accrue. The Federation and the Länder shall be self-supporting and independent of each other in their budget economy (Art. 109). In order to ensure the working efficiency of the Länder with low revenues and to equalize the differing burden of expenditure of the Länder, the Federation may, however, make grants, and take the necessary funds from specific taxes accruing to the Länder. All revenues and expenditures of the Federation must be estimated for each fiscal year and included in the budget, which must be established by law before the beginning of the fiscal year. Decisions of the Bundestag or the Bundesrat which increase the budget expenditure proposed by the Federal Government require its approval (Art. 113).

XI. Transitional and Concluding Provisions

The Articles 116–146 regulate a number of disconnected matters of detail, such as the relation between the old Reich and the Federation, the Federal Government and Allied High Commission, the expenses for occupation costs which have to be borne by the Federation, and the status of former German nationals who now may regain their citizenship. Article 143 contains the threat of severe punishment to those who attempt to change by force the constitutional order of the Federation or of a Land, or to prevent the Federal President by force or the threat of danger from exercising his powers.

HISTORY OF MAJOR CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENTS

I. SOVEREIGNTY AND RESPONSIBILITY

Between July 1952, when legislation for the ratification of the E.D.C. Treaty was first put before the Bundestag, and March 1954, when the process of ratification was completed, the Federal Government had at intervals referred to the Constitutional Court to determine whether an amendment of the Constitution would be necessary.

On March 7th, 1953, in response to the Government's application, the Constitutional Court announced that it could give no ruling as to the constitutional legality or otherwise of the legislation until this had been passed by Parliament. Accordingly, the two Bills, one for the ratification of the E.D.C. and one for the ratification of the Bonn Conventions, were given their third reading in the Bundestag on March 9th, 1953, and both were ratified. On May 15th the ratification Bills were passed by the Bundesrat. The elections of September 1953 gave Dr. Adenauer's Government the majority necessary to make changes in the Federal Constitution, and an amending Bill was presented to the Bundestag in February 1954. This received its second and third readings on February 26th, 1954, and was passed by 334 votes to 144, the Government majority of 190 being 9 more than the two-thirds necessary to make constitutional changes.

This Bill:

- (1) Laid down under an amendment to Article 73 of the Basic Law that the Federal Parliament had full powers to legislate in all matters relating to national defence "including obligatory national service for men over 18 years of age",
- (2) Introduced a new article (142A) which declared that "the treaties signed in Bonn and Paris on May 26th and 27th, 1952 (i.e. the Bonn Conventions and E.D.C. Treaty) were not contrary to the Federal Constitution".

The effect of the amendment was to empower the Federal Government to raise forces for the E.D.C. or for any similar organization which might come into being, to avoid continual recourse to the Constitutional Court.

Since these Amendments to the Constitution were adopted, the treaties concerned (the Bonn Conventions and the E.D.C.) have themselves lapsed; but the Amendments apply equally to the new instruments drawn up as a result of the London Conference of September 1954.

Until September 1954 the operation of the Basic Law was conditioned by two further instruments: the first, the Occupation Statute of 1949 (with subsequent amendments) defining the rights and obligations of the United States, Great Britain and France with respect to Germany; and the second, the Bonn Conventions, designed to replace the Occupation Statute and to grant almost full sovereignty to the German people. There was unforeseen delay in putting the Bonn Conventions into force, simply because they were linked with the European Defence Community Treaty (that is to say the two were bound to come into force simultaneously), and this E.D.C. Treaty had not been ratified by France. The position from May 1952 until September 1954 was therefore that the Occupation Statute (with Amendments) was still the ultimate legal basis for Germany's relations with the western Allies, and for her position in international law; whereas the Bonn Conventions provided the psychological atmosphere in which these relations developed, and in which the Federal Republic gradually took its place as a positive factor in European politics. The Bonn Conventions are important, for this reason, and also because, pruned and revised and divorced from the E.D.C., they were used as the basis for the new instruments of sovereignty, drawn up after the London Conference of September 1954 (see below).

The Bonn Conventions

At the Brussels Conference in December 1950 the governments of the United States, Great Britain and France declared themselves ready and willing to enter into contractual negotiations with the Federal Republic of Germany, and thereby to complete agreements which would supersede the Occupation Statute of 1949 and restore to Germany the maximum degree of sovereignty possible in the light of the international situation. The Allied governments made it clear from the outset that they did not wish this move to abolish in their entirety the Four-Power agreements of 1945, which were the remaining link between East and West Germany and which could still be the basis for settlement of the German problem by negotiation; but that they considered that the powers of the Federal Government could not be curtailed indefinitely or pending such settlement. The resulting Conventions were a product of the unique political situation which had developed in Germany since 1945, and could not in themselves do away with the division of Germany, nor overcome the facts that foreign troops will undoubtedly remain on German soil until international tension has eased, and that the final Peace Treaty continues to be deferred; and as they were linked with the European Defence Community Treaty they could not without new decisions come into force without it.

The negotiations which led to the Bonn Conventions began in May 1951, and the Conventions were signed in Bonn by the Foreign Ministers of the United States, Great Britain and France on the one hand, and the Foreign Minister of the Federal Republic of Germany on the other, on May 26th, 1952. Under the Conventions:

FEDERAL GERMANY—(THE CONSTITUTION)

(1) The Occupation Statute was abolished, and the Federal Government inherited full freedom in so far as the international situation permits.

(2) Allied forces in Germany were no longer occupation forces, but part of "the defence of the free world, of which the Federal Republic and West Berlin form a part".

(3) A number of problems which would normally be settled by a Peace Treaty were resolved; the Conventions were in effect a provisional treaty to end the war between the Federal Republic and the Three Powers, pending a final treaty between the whole of Germany and the Four. Under this heading the following provisions were made:

- (a) The Federal Republic would have full control over its internal and foreign affairs and relations with the Three Powers would be conducted through ambassadors.
- (b) Only because of the international situation would the Three Powers claim their rights regarding the stationing of armed forces on German soil, matters concerning Berlin, the re-unification of Germany and the final Peace Treaty.
- (c) The Federal Republic undertook to conduct its policy according to the principles of the United Nations.
- (d) In their negotiations with states with which the Federal Republic has no relations, the Three Powers would consult with the Federal Government.
- (e) The Federal Republic would participate in the European Defence Community.
- (f) The Three Powers and the Federal Republic agreed that a freely negotiated peace settlement for the whole of Germany was their common aim, and that determination of the final boundaries of Germany must await such a treaty.

The Conventions also included supplementary contractual agreements concerning the rights and obligations of foreign troops in Germany, taxation of the armed forces, a Finance Convention, and a Convention on the settlement of matters arising out of the war and the occupation.

The London and Paris Agreements

On August 30th, 1954, the E.D.C. Treaty was finally debated and defeated in the French National Assembly, and with it the corner stone of western policy over the previous two years was swept away. The need to fill the void was urgent; and it was generally realized that some means must be found to restore German sovereignty, and to allow for its corollary, a German contribution to western defence, in a manner which would be acceptable to France.

For this purpose a conference was held in London at the end of September, at which the Foreign Ministers of Belgium, Canada, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, the United Kingdom and the United States took part. This conference opened on September 28th, and on October 3rd the Final Act was signed after intense negotiation. By this it was agreed that Germany and Italy should enter an expanded Brussels Treaty Organization; that German sovereignty should be restored and that she should, on agreed terms, enter N.A.T.O.; and that an Agency for the control of armaments on the continent of Europe should be set up. Instructions were then given for the drafting of the various instruments which would be necessary to give effect to these decisions, and it was agreed that a further meeting should be held at the earliest possible opportunity to endorse them in their detailed form.

On October 20th, 1954, a conference began in Paris to complete the work of the London Conference. It was again attended by the Foreign Ministers of Belgium, Canada, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, the United Kingdom and the United States; and as in London the Governments of The United States, Great Britain and France, dealt with the aspects of German sovereignty for which they have special responsibilities.

It was announced on October 21st that full agreement had been reached on the outstanding issues concerning German sovereignty, and that details for the expansion of the Brussels Treaty Organization, both in scope and functions and in size, to include both Germany and Italy, had also been agreed; the expanded organization is known as Western European Union.

German Sovereignty and Western European Union

On May 5th, 1955, with the depositing of the instruments of ratification of the London and Paris Agreements, the German Federal Republic attained its sovereignty. The three-power status continues for the time being in West Berlin, but is modified by a declaration by the American, French and British Commandants. The ratification also brought into being the newly constituted Western European Union, and the Federal Republic simultaneously became a member of it and of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

II. OTHER AMENDMENTS

In June 1968 legislation was finally passed providing for emergency measures to be taken during a time of crisis. The Bill had received much opposition, mainly from the Left, since the introduction of the first draft by Dr. Schröder in 1960.

The main provisions of this, the 17th Amendment to the Constitution, were to allow the authorities to place certain restrictions on the secrecy of correspondence and telecommunications, to conscript men into the armed forces and to use the armed forces to fight armed insurgents if the free democratic status of the Federal Republic or of any Land was threatened. A new Article 53a provided for the establishment of a committee of 33 members, two-thirds members of the Bundestag and one-third members of the Bundesrat, which must be informed by the Federal Government of any plans in the event of a defence emergency. The life of parliamentary bodies and the terms of office of the Federal President and his deputy might be extended during a defence emergency.

In June 1969 a Bill amending Article 38 was passed by both houses. This reduced the voting age from 21 years to 18 years for Federal elections and the age of eligibility for election to the Federal Parliament from 25 years to 21 years.

WEST BERLIN

On August 4th, 1950, the Berlin City Assembly passed a Constitution defining its special position under technical three-power control. Under German Constitutional Law Berlin is a Land of the Federal Republic but this law is at present suspended by three-power reservations. Nevertheless West Berlin sends representatives to the Bundestag and Bundesrat in Bonn but these representatives have no vote in the plenary sessions of either House. To be valid in West Berlin, Federal Law has to be specially adopted there. The Constitution came into force on October 1st, 1950.

The House of Representatives (Abgeordnetenhaus) is the legislative body, and has 140 members. The executive agency is the Senate, which is composed of the Governing Mayor (Regierender Bürgermeister), his deputy, and at the most sixteen Senators. The Governing Mayor is elected by a majority of the House of Representatives. The Senate, which is responsible to the House of Representatives and dependent on its confidence, is formed by the majority party (S.P.D.).

RELIGION

The section on Religion, covering both parts of Germany, follows immediately after the chapter on the German Democratic Republic.

THE PRESS

The advent to power of the National Socialist Party in 1933 interrupted the press freedom which Germany had enjoyed under the Weimar Republic and which was not fully restored until 1949. In 1946 the Allies introduced a licensing system, considerably restricting press freedom by confining it to a limited number of approved publishers. Two years later six eminent German citizens, including Konrad Adenauer and Carlo Schmid, issued to the Allies their celebrated "Memorandum on Democracy and the Freedom of the Press"; in it they criticized the licensing system and the monopolies and curtailment of freedom that ensued, and appealed for German press freedom to be entrusted to German Law and German Courts.

This appeal became effective in 1949 when licences were abolished and the Federal Constitution was promulgated to constitute the Basic Law of the Republic. Article 5 stipulates: "Everyone has the right freely to express or to disseminate his opinion by speech, writing and pictures and freely to inform himself from generally accessible sources. Freedom of the press and freedom of reporting by radio and motion pictures are guaranteed. There shall be no censorship. These rights are limited by the provisions of the general laws, the provisions of the law for the protection of youth, and by the right to inviolability of personal honour." These last qualifications refer to the Federal law penalising the sale to young people of literature judged to endanger morality, and to articles in the Penal Code relating to defamation, in particular Article 187A concerning defamation of public figures.

There is no Federal Press Law, all legal action being normally referred back to the Constitution. But the press is subject to general items of legislation some of which may significantly limit press freedom. Article 353C of the Penal Code for example, dating from the Nazi period, prohibits the publication of official news supposed to be secret; under it a journalist may be required to reveal his sources. The Code of Criminal Procedure also constitutes a danger in that it authorizes the government to confiscate objects potentially important as evidence in a legal investigation, which may be construed to include papers, print, etc. An unsuccessful attempt was made in 1964 to pass a bill permitting prior censorship of the press and other stringent measures in times of emergency such as war.

Freedom of the press is stipulated in each of the Constitutions of the individual Länder. Many Länder have recently enacted laws defining the press's democratic role. For example the Hamburg Press Law of January, 1965, declares that "the press is free and serves free democratic order" and defines its public function as the gathering and publicizing of news, criticism, the forming of public opinion and public education. Many Länder give the press access to sources of government information. Some Länder authorize the journalist to refuse to disclose his sources; others qualify, and even withhold this right. Some permit printed matter to be confiscated on suspicion of an indictable offence only if authorized by an independent judge; others allow a district attorney or even the police to give this authorization.

The German Press Council, modelled on the English pattern, is composed of publishers and journalists. It investigates complaints against the press and enjoys a considerable standing.

The Federal German press is quite free of government control. No daily is directly owned by a political party, and though some 10 per cent of papers support a party line, at least two-thirds of newspapers, including all the major dailies, are politically independent.

The political and economic conditions since 1949 have fostered the rapid development of a few large publishing groups. This situation, analogous to the U.K. press structure, has been criticized as "undemocratic".

The press situation has been under consideration by three government commissions, which have suggested various measures to halt the trend towards concentration. Such a measure was the tax rebate granted for one year in April 1968 to papers selling less than 160,000 copies. About 400 publications benefited by some DM 20,000 (£2,000).

The main press commission, the Günther commission, issued an interim report on May 22nd 1968. The commission laid down various limits on the proportions of circulation one group should be allowed to control: (1) 40 per cent of the total circulation of newspapers or 40 per cent of the total circulation of magazines; (2) 20 per cent of the total circulation of newspapers and magazines together; (3) 15 per cent of the circulation in one field if the proportion owned in the other field is 40 per cent. At that time Springer's estimated ownership was 39.2 per cent of newspaper circulation (65-70 per cent in Berlin) and 17.5 per cent of magazine circulation. In June Springer reduced his share of the periodical market to around 11 per cent by selling Eltern, Twen, Jasmin and Bravo (whose joint circulation is some 4,500,000), and Das Neue Blatt. Eltern, Twen and Jasmin, having changed hands again, now belong to another group in Hamburg, Gruner and Jahr, while Bravo and Das Neue Blatt are part of Heinrich-Bauer-Verlag.

Before the report of the Günther commission the most active opponents of press concentration had been the students. Their long campaign against the Springer Group culminated in April (after Rudi Dutschke's shooting) in attacks on the offices of the Group and attempts in many parts of Germany to prevent distribution of its papers. The most powerful of these is Bild Zeitung, whose mass circulation (4,700,000) was easily attracted by a formula completely new to the German press of the 1950s: bold, simple reporting and editorials, coupled with striking pictures and banner headlines. The paper's success has also been helped by Springer's ability to print it in eight different provincial centres, a great advantage in a country where the regional press has always been strong.

Axel Springer Group (Prop. AXEL CÄSAR SPRINGER): Kaiser-Wilhelm-Strasse, 2 Hamburg 36; the largest newspaper publishing group in continental Europe; includes five major dailies (Die Welt, Hamburger Abendblatt, Bild Zeitung, Berliner Morgenpost, B.Z.), two Sunday papers (Welt am Sonntag, Bild am Sonntag), a radio, television and family magazine (Hör Zu) and the Propyläen Verlag and Ullstein Verlag publishing firms.

The other principal groups are as follows:

Gruner und Jahr Group (Drs. J. JAHR, G. BUCERIUS): 2 Hamburg 1 Pressehaus; owns amongst others the weekly Die Zeit, the popular illustrated periodicals Stern, Petra, Brigitte, Es, Capital and Schöner Wohnen, and the glossy magazines for parents and teenagers, formerly owned by the Springer Group, Eltern, Twen and Jasmin.

FEDERAL GERMANY—(THE PRESS)

Süddeutscher-Verlag (Pres. HANS DÜRRMEIER): owns Süddeutsche Zeitung and München Abendzeitung.

Jahreszeiten-Verlag (Pres. HELMUT GANSKE): owns amongst others the periodicals Für Sie and Moderne Frau.

Heinrich-Bauer-Verlag (Pres. HEINRICH BAUER): owns the popular illustrated magazines Quick (Munich), Neue Revue (Hamburg), Praline, Neue Post; and Das Neue Blatt and Bravo, formerly owned by the Springer Group.

Burda Druck und Verlag (Pres. Dr. FRANZ BURDA): 7600 Offenbach/Baden; owns Bunte Illustrierte, Bild und Funk, Freundin and Das Haus.

The most important and influential daily newspapers include Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Süddeutsche Zeitung (Munich) and Die Welt (Hamburg). The most popular dailies apart from Bild Zeitung are Westdeutsche Allgemeine (569,900), Hamburger Morgenblatt (400,000), Hamburger Abendblatt (340,000) and B.Z. (350,000).

The most influential weeklies include Die Zeit (Hamburg), the Sunday Welt am Sonntag and Bild am Sonntag, and the political periodical Der Spiegel. Numerous popular illustrated weekly periodicals have developed, led by Hör Zu (4,300,000), Stern (1,865,000) and Quick (1,684,000).

Figures for 1970 show that 389 dailies and 63 Sunday and weekly papers were published in Germany, giving an average daily circulation of over 21 million—the highest on the Continent. In the same year 846 periodicals, with a total circulation of nearly 90 million were published. Of these 227 were of the popular variety.

FINANCE

(cap.=capital; p.u.=paid up; dep.=deposits; m.=million)

At the end of the Second World War devaluation had rendered the Reichsmark nearly worthless. As a result the Deutsche Mark (DM) was introduced in 1948 with a parity of 4.2 DM per $. It was subsequently revalued in 1961 at 4 DM per $, and after much speculation in 1969 was allowed to float prior to and during the General Elections. When the D-Mark was finally fixed at the end of October, its parity had risen to 3.66 DM per $. Confidence in the D-Mark, which is one of Europe's most stable currencies, has made it into an internationally sought after hard currency.

Until 1957 the issue of bank notes was the responsibility of the Bank Deutscher Länder; since that time the task has been carried out by the Deutsche Bundesbank (Federal Bank), with its central offices in the Länder acting as "main administrative organs of the Federal Bank". In exercising its legal powers, the Federal Bank is not subject to control from the Government. Apart from the Federal Bank there are central financial institutions with special tasks such as the Credit Institute for Reconstruction (Kreditanstalt für Wiederaufbau) which administers European Recovery Plan funds, the Equalization of Burdens Bank (Lastenausgleichsbank) which administers funds for the rehabilitation of refugees, and the clearing houses of the communal banks—the German Municipal Bank, the Industrial Credit Bank, and the Agricultural Annuity Bank.

There are over 1,600 institutions with 15,000 branches in the banking sector of the Federal Republic, and the three largest banks are the Deutsche Bank, the Commerzbank, and the Dresdner Bank. All of these three carry on the German Private bank tradition of universal banking, whereby banks offer advice and carry out all kinds of financial transaction on their customers' behalf. Although the Deutsche Bank has over 800 branches, and the Commerzbank over 570, 83 per cent of all bank-branches have less than ten employees, and there is considerable competition from the large number of small establishments. The Post Office runs a well established giro system, and there are over 850 small savings banks with 3,700 branches, mainly run by local, municipal, and rural authorities, which hold about 60 per cent of the capital in the savings sector. During the last few years the savings banks have been encroaching upon the formerly commercial bank monopoly of industrial credit. Also important are the Credit Co-operatives such as the "Volksbanken" which grant industrial credit, and the "Raiffeisenkassen" which deal in agricultural credit. The "Bayerische Hypotheken und Wechsel Bank" is a typical regional bank, and an example of a specialist bank which has rapidly grown into one of Germany's major banks is the trade-union and consumer co-operatives owned "Bank für Gemeinwirtschaft" which originally specialized in the salvage of floundering business.

There are about 8,900 insurance companies and 31 building societies operating in the Federal Republic, of which 910 of the former and 17 of the latter are subject to supervision by Federal Board of Control for Insurance and Building Savings; the remainder being controlled by Länder authorities. Of the insurance companies 251 specialize in forms of life insurance, 220 in pensions, 100 in accident insurance, 172 in general insurance, 85 in agriculture, 38 in shipping, and 34 in re-insurance. 168 foreign companies operate in the Federal Republic, 143 of them from OECD countries. In 1967 the receipts of all branches of insurance totalled 24.4 billion D-Marks.

There are stock-exchanges at West Berlin, Bremen, Düsseldorf, Frankfurt-am-Main (considered to be the financial capital of the Federal Republic), Hamburg, Hanover, Munich, and Stuttgart.

Landeszentralbank in Schleswig-Holstein: 2300 Kiel, Fleethörn 26; Pres. Board of Management OTTO KÄHLER.

By the Law of July 26th, 1957 the former Land Central Banks and the Berlin Central Bank were merged with the Bank deutscher Länder to form the Deutsche Bundesbank. The functions of the Deutsche Bundesbank are to issue bank notes, to regulate note and coin circulation and supply of credit, and to ensure due execution by banks of both internal and external payments.

The organs of the Deutsche Bundesbank are the Central Bank Council (Zentralbankrat), the Directorate (Direktorium) and the Boards of Management of the Land Central Banks. The Central Bank Council consists of the President and Vice-President of the Deutsche Bundesbank, the other members of the Directorate and the Presidents of the Land Central Banks. Its general function is to determine money and credit policies, to lay down business and administrative directives, and to state the responsibilities of the Directorate and Boards of Management. The Directorate consists of the President and the Vice-President of the Deutsche Bundesbank and of not more than eight further members. It must implement decisions taken by the Central Bank Council and manage and administer the Bank, except in matters coming within the competence of the Land Central Banks' Boards of Management. The Directorate controls Federal, foreign exchange and open market transactions.

The Deutsche Bundesbank maintains Head Offices (Hauptverwaltungen) in each Land, known as Landeszentralbanken. The Boards of Management of each of these Land Central Banks, normally consisting of the President and Vice-President, are responsible for all transactions and administrative business within the Land.

The Deutsche Bundesbank is bound, as far as is consistent with its functions, to support Government economic policy, although it is independent of instructions from the Government. The Bank may advise on important monetary policy, and members of the Federal Government may take part in the deliberations of the Central Bank Council but may not vote.

2. THE COMMERCIAL BANKS

During the banking reform of 1946-47 the three large private banking houses of Germany, the Deutsche Bank, the Dresdner Bank and the Commerzbank (known as the D-Banks), were decentralized into thirty small successor institutions, none of which might have branches outside its own Land. This arrangement was superseded in 1952 by a further reorganization; at this stage the three D-Banks formally transferred their business to nine successor institutes, and the three Berlin successors to the D-Banks were brought into the scheme. The successors to the Deutsche Bank were the Norddeutsche Bank of Hamburg, the Deutsche Bank Aktiengesellschaft West of Düsseldorf, and the Süddeutsche Bank of Munich; those of the Dresdner Bank were the Hamburg Kreditbank, the Rhein-Main Bank of Frankfurt am Main, and the Rhein-Ruhr Bank of Düsseldorf, and those of the Commerzbank, the Commerzbank Bankverein of Düsseldorf, the Commerz- und Kreditbank of Frankfurt am Main, and the Commerz- und Discontobank of Hamburg. The three Berlin successors of the D-Banks were the Berliner Disconto Bank, the Bank für Handel und Industrie, and the Berliner Commerzbank.

By a further agreement reached in April 1957 the process of decentralization was reversed to a large extent and both the Deutsche Bank and the Dresdner Bank reabsorbed their successor institutions, with the exception of their Berlin successors, the Berliner Disconto Bank and the Bank für Handel und Industrie which continue as separate subsidiary concerns of the Deutsche Bank and the Dresdner Bank respectively. This agreement did not affect the previous arrangement of 1952 with regard to the successor institutes of the Commerzbank, which still functioned as independent organizations.

A final reorganization took place in November 1958, by which the three successor institutions to the Commerzbank were merged into one organization, the Commerzbank A.G.; the Berlin successor institute, the Berliner Commerzbank A.G., continues to exist as a separate institute.

Württembergisches Staatstheater: 7000 Stuttgart, Oberer Schlossgarten 6; state theatre for drama, opera and ballet; Gen. Man. PETER DOLL.

ORCHESTRAS

There are numerous symphony and chamber orchestras. The following are among the most important.

Bamberger Symphonisches Orchester: Bamberg.

Berliner Philharmonisches Orchester: Berlin, 30 Matthäikirchstr. 1; Principal Conductor HERBERT VON KARAJAN.

Radio-Symphonie-Orchester Berlin: Berlin; Dir. HEINZ HOEFS; Chief Conductor LORIN MAAZEL.

Hamburgisches Staatsphilharmonisches Orchester: Hamburg; Conductor WOLFGANG SAWALLISCH.

Norddeutscher Rundfunk Hamburg NDR-Sinfonie-Orchester: Honorary Conductor HANS SCHMIDT-ISSERSTEDT; Chief Conductor MOSHE ATZMON.

Philharmonia Hungarica: Theater der Stadt, P.O.B. 1422, Marl; originally from Hungary; Gen. Man. JOSEF BOCSANEC.

Bayrischer Rundfunk Sinfonie-Orchester: Munich; Dir. RAFAEL KUBELIK.

Bayrisches Philharmonisches Orchester: Munich; Conductor RUDOLF KEMPE.

Bayrisches Staatsorchester: Munich.

Münchner Philharmoniker: Munich 2, Rindermarkt 3-4/III; f. 1893.

Stuttgarter Kammerorchester: 7 Stuttgart 1, Charlottenplatz 17; Conductor KARL MÜNCHINGER.

ATOMIC ENERGY

Bundesministerium für Bildung und Wissenschaft (Federal Ministry for Education and Science): 5300 Bonn 9, Heussallee 2-10, Postfach 9124; f. 1955; Minister Prof. Dr. HANS LEUSSINK.

The Ministry is divided into five departments, the first dealing with administration and international co-operation, the second with educational planning, the third with general promotion of scientific research, the fourth with nuclear research and engineering, radiation protection, data processing, and the fifth with outer space research.

The Ministry's responsibility in the nuclear energy field is to promote nuclear research and nuclear engineering as well as to plan and co-ordinate the activities of all of these bodies within the framework of the German Nuclear Programme. In addition the Ministry supervises the execution of the Atomic Energy Act by the German Länder, in particular with reference to radiological protection and the safety of the population. In 1971 some DM 1,286 million were placed at the Ministry's disposal for the fulfilment of its tasks in the nuclear energy field.

Deutsche Atomkommission (German Atomic Energy Advisory Commission): 5300 Bonn 9, Heussallee 2-10, Postfach 9124; f. 1955; Chair. Bundesminister Prof. Dr. HANS LEUSSINK; Deputy Chairs. Prof. Dipl.-Ing. LEO BRANDT, Prof. Dr. WERNER HEISENBERG, Prof. Dr.-Ing. KARL WINNACKER.

The Commission is at present composed of 28 members, representing science, industry, the trade unions and public life. The Commission has no executive powers, its function being to advise the Federal Ministry for Education and Science on all important matters of nuclear research, engineering and economy.

Nuclear research is carried out in universities and technical colleges in co-operation with the Max Planck Society and in the following research centres:

- 1 Karlsruhe Research Centre.
- 2 Jülich Research Centre, Nordrhein-Westfalen.
- 3 The Geesthacht Reactor Station of the Society for the Use of Nuclear Energy in Shipping, Hamburg.
- 4 Institute for Plasmaphysics, Garching, near Munich.
- 5 German Electron-Synchrotron, Hamburg-Bahrenfeld.
- 6 Hahn-Meitner Institute for Nuclear Research, Berlin.
- 7 Institutes of the Society for Radiation Research in Neuherberg, near Munich.
- 8 Society for Heavy Ion Research, Darmstadt.

There are 15 research reactors and 2 critical facilities in operation, 3 research reactors are under construction; 10 further small reactors serve for training.

Three experimental power reactors are operated in Kahl (Main), Karlsruhe and Jülich. One is under construction at Nedaichbach (Isar). Three larger demonstration plants of about 250 MWe each are in operation in Gundremmingen (Donau), Lingen (Ems) and Obrigheim (Neckar). Five nuclear power stations with a gross capacity of 4,050 MWe are under construction at Stader (Elbe) 630 MWe, Würgassen (Weser) 640 MWe, Brunsbüttelkoog 770 MWe, Philippsburg (Rhine) 864 MWe, and Biblis (Rhine) 1,145 MWe. Five additional nuclear power plants with a gross capacity of 5,140 MWe have been contracted in 1971: Neckarwestheim (Neckar) 775 MWe, Philippsburg (Rhine) 864 MWe, Ohn (Isar) 900 MWe,

FEDERAL GERMANY—(ATOMIC ENERGY, UNIVERSITIES)

Esenshamm (Weser) 1,300 MWe, Biblis (Rhine) 1,300 MWe. In addition the 300 MWe THTR demonstration plant with a gas-cooled high temperature reactor of the pebble-bed type is being set up at Schmehausen (Westphalia). These new power stations will come into operation between 1972 and 1977. At present the Federal Republic generates about 900 MWe of power from nuclear sources.

German industry was successful in concluding an export contract for the first nuclear power station in South America, the 318 MWe plant at Atucha, Argentine. A second export order is being executed by the KKW with the construction of a 450 MWe nuclear power station in the Netherlands. A third contract was placed for a nuclear power station at Zwentendorf, Austria with 704 MWe.

GERMAN DEMOCRATIC REPUBLIC

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The German Democratic Republic is bounded to the north by the Baltic Sea, to the west, south-west and south by the Federal Republic of Germany, to the south-east by Czechoslovakia and to the east by Poland along the line of the rivers Oder and Neisse. The climate is warm in summer with cold winters. The language is German. About 80 per cent of the population are Protestant and 10 per cent Roman Catholic. There are about 3,500 Jews. The flag carries three horizontal bands of black, red and gold, bearing in the centre the coat of arms showing a hammer and compass on a wreath of grain. The capital is established in East Berlin.

Recent History

After Germany's unconditional surrender in 1945, the country was divided according to the Potsdam agreement into four Allied zones of occupation. The Potsdam Declaration stated that, pending a final peace treaty, those areas of the former German Reich east of the line defined by the course of the rivers Oder and Neisse (Oder/Neisse Line), including the city of Danzig, should become part of Poland. The northern section of East Prussia became part of the Soviet Union. These territories amounted to about 14 per cent of the population and 24 per cent of the area of the former Reich. During 1946, in the Soviet Zone, the Communist Party fused with the Social Democratic Party to form the Socialist Unity Party (S.E.D.) which since that time under the leadership of Walter Ulbricht and, since May 1971, Erich Honecker continues to exert a leading influence upon the development of the State. The immediate post-war period was marked by a process of denazification and nationalization. Many industrial enterprises became state-owned, and under the land-reform measures large areas of landed property were taken over by the state and converted to various types of collective farming. In 1949, following the foundation of the Federal Republic of Germany, the Soviet Zone produced a constitution of its own, thus declaring itself to be the German Democratic Republic, with its capital in Berlin. The early years of the G.D.R. were severe for the population. Much war damage had been inflicted upon the industrial capacity of the territory, which had anyway been primarily an agricultural area of the Reich. Large sections of the industry which remained had been transported to the Soviet Union as part of the heavy reparations, and the G.D.R. contributed to the upkeep of Soviet forces permanently stationed within its borders. With these economic burdens, and the government's concerted drive to build heavy industry, the standard of living remained low. In 1953 popular discontent led to uprisings in East Berlin and other cities. These were suppressed by Soviet troops, and the government modified its economic policy towards an improvement in living standards. With a continual outflow of refugees, the population declined—a situation particularly worrying to the government since many of the refugees were from the skilled labour force and the professions. In 1961 the stream of refugees leaving the G.D.R. via West Berlin was halted by the construction of a wall between East and West Berlin, thus completing the G.D.R.'s control of its frontiers. In the ensuing years, and particularly since the introduction of the "New Economic System" in 1963, the G.D.R. has, like the Federal Republic, brought about its own economic miracle and has emerged as the most dynamic economy in Eastern Europe. In 1955 a peace treaty was signed with the Soviet Union. The Republic has been a member of Comecon since its foundation in 1949, and in 1964 signed a 20-year treaty of Friendship, Mutual Assistance and Co-operation with the Soviet Union. Up to the late 1960s the G.D.R. was only recognized by the other countries of the Socialist Bloc, but since 1971 other states have commenced diplomatic relations with the Republic. Because of unresolved problems concerning its status, in the context of former Allied agreements, no Western country yet recognizes the G.D.R. Trade representations do however exist in several Western European capitals. Herr Stoph, Chairman of the G.D.R. Council of Ministers, and Federal Chancellor Brandt met twice in 1970. These were the first such meetings in the history of divided Germany. In 1971, following the four power agreement on Berlin signed in September, representatives of the two German states and of West Berlin held talks which clarified the details of access rights to West Berlin and also allowed West Berliners to visit the G.D.R.

Government

The government is that of a people's democracy on the Soviet pattern. All citizens of 18 years and over have the right to vote representatives to the Volkskammer (People's Chamber) who in turn elect the Presidium, the Council of State and its Chairman, the Head of State. The Volkskammer also elects the Chairman of the Council of Ministers (the executive organ) and approves his appointed ministers.

In April 1968 nearly 95 per cent of the electorate voted in favour of the new Constitution which came into force immediately.

Defence

A National People's Army, comprising land, sea and air forces, was created out of the People's Police in 1956. Total strength is 126,000 comprising Army 90,000, Navy 16,000, Air Force 20,000. Military service lasts eighteen months. There are also about 46,000 border troops, 20,000 security troops and about 350,000 members of the Workers Fighting squads. Defence estimates for 1971 totalled 7,200 million Ost Marks. The G.D.R. is a member of the Warsaw Pact.

Economic Affairs

The Republic has been a member of Comecon since 1950, and the economy of the country is therefore closely linked with that of the Soviet Union and other member countries. Since the introduction of the "New Economic System" in 1963 there has been a moderate tendency towards industrial de-centralization, giving some latitude for medium-level decision making within the general prescriptions of the State Economic Plan. An increasing stress has been laid upon quality products such as optics, electronics and precision machinery, all of which are finding a growing market outside Comecon. In 1970, of the 11,564 industrial enterprises in the G.D.R., 2,437 were state owned, 311 co-operative, 3,184 private owned and 5,632 joint state/private owned. Before the division of Germany, the territory was primarily agricultural. In terms of production it has now become one of the greatest industrial nations in the world, although at the end of 1970 it was announced that industrial production and growth rates were falling below the targets set by the Economic Plan, indicating that the G.D.R. was suffering from economic growth problems. The only major natural resource in the G.D.R. is lignite, which supplies almost 90 per cent of its basic energy. It has the only lignite coking plant in the world, and is now building a second nuclear power station. A developing source of power is oil which comes in from the Kubischev oil fields in Russia via a 3,000 kilometre pipeline. The machine, chemical, and heavy engineering industries are leading exporters. Amongst the newer industries, electronics and shipbuilding take a prominent place. The Leipzig trade fairs are important centres of international trade. All farmers are members of agricultural production co-operatives. The Democratic Republic is becoming more and more self-supporting in this field.

Transport and Communications

There is a comprehensive transport system by rail, road, waterway and air. In 1970 there were 14,658 kilometres of railway, about 9 per cent of which were electrified. In the same year there were 45,729 kilometres of classified roads, of which 1,413 kilometres were motorway (Autobahn). There were also 2,519 kilometres of navigable inland waterways. The principal port, Rostock, is being developed to carry more of East Europe's trade with the rest of the world. 175 ships constitute the G.D.R.'s merchant fleet, which has a capacity of more than one million tons.

Social Welfare

State social insurance is compulsory for all employees. It also covers their dependants and special classes such as students. The scheme provides for medical and dental treatment, sick pay, maternity grants, old age, disability, and bereavement pensions. A five-day working week is now constitutionally enforced, and the paid thirteen-day annual holiday can be spent at one of the 1,260 vacation centres, which are administered by the Confederation of Free German Trade Unions. Youth services and sport receive large State subsidies.

Education

Education in the G.D.R. plans to cater for children from early childhood to the completion of a university course. Children between the ages of 1 to 3 can be accommodated in crèches if their mothers are working, and in nursery schools from 4 to 6. Since 1959 elementary and secondary schools have been abolished in favour of ten-year polytechnics, in which children from the age of six must receive at least ten years of education. There are opportunities for studying up to Abitur during vocational training courses. A variety of university entrance qualifications are also available via evening-classes, factory and village academies, and university extension courses. In 1970 15 per cent of pupils left school after 8 years of education, and nearly all of these entered an apprenticeship or vocational training scheme. The University Reforms of 1969, besides revising administration, state that the standard course of study will now be four years. The first two years will be dedicated to basic and general study, and the last two to specialization. There are seven universities and a number of technological institutes.

Tourism

Tourism is fostered by the State Travel Bureau. The island of Rügen off the Baltic coast has considerable tourist traffic. The mountains of Thuringia and the Erzgebirge on the Czech frontier are much visited both in summer and winter. During 1970 nearly 600,000 tourists visited the G.D.R.

Sport

Sport in all forms is actively encouraged and there is a special State Committee for Physical Education and Sport. The German Gymnastics and Athletics Association incorporates all amateur sports in 36 specialized organizations. Outside the schools, sport is sponsored by factory sports organizations and clubs. Football, swimming and tennis are among the most popular sports.

Public Holidays

1972: March 31 (Good Friday), May 1 (Labour Day), May 22 (Whitsun), October 7 (Republic Day), December 25 and 26 (Christmas).

1973: January 1 (New Year's Day).

Weights and Measures

The Metric System is in force.

Currency and Exchange Rates

The basic unit is the Mark der Deutschen Demokratischen Republik (M). The currency is not recognized by the International Monetary Fund. Currency of the German Democratic Republic is not ordinarily convertible with the £ sterling or the $U.S. abroad. In the Democratic Republic other currencies are converted at fixed rates.

1 Mark = 100 Pfennig.

Notes: M 100, 50, 20, 10, 5.

Coins: M 5, 2, 1; Pfennig 50, 20, 10, 5, 1.

THE CONSTITUTION

The Constitution of the German Democratic Republic was promulgated on April 9th, 1968, replacing the original Constitution which came into force when the Republic was founded in 1949. A summary is given below.

I FOUNDATIONS OF THE SOCIALIST STATE

Political Foundations (Articles 1-8)

The German Democratic Republic is a socialist state of the German nation. It is the political organization of the working people in town and countryside who are jointly implementing socialism under the leadership of the working class and its Marxist-Leninist party. The capital is Berlin; the State flag is black, red, and gold, and bears the State coat of arms. All political power in the Republic is exercised by the working people and all power serves their welfare. The National Front of Democratic Germany unites all political parties and mass organizations working for the development of the socialist state. Citizens exercise their political power through democratically elected people's representatives. The Republic pursues a peaceful foreign policy and fosters friendship with the U.S.S.R. and other socialist states. It strives for the eventual reunification of the two German states on the basis of socialism.

Economic Foundations, Science, Education and Culture (Articles 9-17)

The national economy is based on the socialist ownership of the means of production and is a socialist planned economy. All foreign economic relations are the monopoly of the state. All large industrial enterprises, farms, banks and means of transport are nationally owned and private ownership of these facilities is not allowed. The personal property of citizens and the right of inheritance are guaranteed. The Republic promotes culture, the arts and science and assures all citizens a high standard of education.

II CITIZENS AND ORGANIZATIONS IN SOCIALIST SOCIETY

Basic Rights and Basic Duties of Citizens (Articles 18-39)

The Republic respects the dignity and freedom of personality and guarantees to all citizens the exercise of their rights. The conditions for acquiring and losing citizenship of the German Democratic Republic are stipulated by law. All citizens are equal before the law. Men and women have equal rights and the same legal status. All citizens over the age of 18 have the right to vote and may be elected to the local people's representative bodies. Persons over the age of 21 may be elected to the People's Chamber (Volkshammer). Every citizen is obligated to service in defence of his country. The Republic can grant political asylum to citizens of other states in certain circumstances.

Freedom of speech, the press, radio and television are guaranteed, as is also the right to peaceful demonstration and assembly. The person and the liberty of every citizen are inviolable and he has the right to move freely within the state territory within the framework of the law. Postal and telecommunication secrecy is assured and may be limited only for purposes of state security or criminal prosecution. Every citizen has the right to legal protection by the organs of the state when he is abroad.

The right to work is guaranteed and every citizen is free to select his own job. Everyone has the same right to education and attendance at secondary school is obligatory. All citizens are entitled to leisure time and annual paid holiday, to medical and other social welfare benefits. Social care is provided for the elderly and disabled. Housing is under public control and there is legal protection against eviction. Every citizen has the right of the inviolability of his home. Marriage, motherhood and the family have the special protection of the state and provision is made for large families, fatherless families, etc. Religious freedom is assured. Citizens of the German Democratic Republic of Sorb nationality have the right to cultivate their mother tongue and culture.

Enterprises, Towns and Local Communities in Socialist Society (Articles 40-42)

Enterprises, towns, local communities and associations of local communities are communities with responsibilities of their own in which citizens work and shape their social relations. They safeguard the basic rights of citizens and are protected by the constitution. The local representative bodies are elected by the people and are responsible for local affairs. The working people also co-operate in the management of enterprises both directly and with the help of their elected organs.

The Trade Unions and their rights (Articles 43-44)

The free trade unions are united in the Confederation of Free German Trade Unions. They are independent bodies, are represented at all levels of the social system and play a decisive part in the solution of problems. They conclude agreements with government authorities and enterprise managements on all questions concerning the working and living conditions of the people. They take part in the shaping of the socialist legal system and administer the social insurance system of the workers.

Socialist Production Co-operatives and Their Rights (Article 45)

These are voluntary associations of farmers for the purpose of joint production and receive government assistance. They are represented in the state organs and take an active part in the state planning. Production co-operatives on the same lines also exist among fishermen, craftsmen and gardeners.

III STRUCTURE AND SYSTEM OF STATE MANAGEMENT

The People's Chamber (Volkshammer) (Articles 48-65)

The People's Chamber is the supreme organ of state power and guarantees the enforcement of its laws. It is composed of 500 deputies elected by the people in a free and secret ballot for a period of four years. It is convened not later than the 30th day after the election. It elects its Presidium to conduct the plenary sessions for the electoral term. The People's Chamber can be dissolved before the expiration of the electoral term only on its own decision.

Committees are formed from among the members of the People's Chamber to discuss bills and to co-operate in submitting them to the voters for popular discussion. They then submit their comments to the plenary session of the People's Chamber. Laws passed are proclaimed in the Law Gazette by the Chairman of the Council of State within one month and come into force on the fourteenth day after their proclamation.

The Council of State (Staatsrat) (Articles 66-77)

The Council of State is the organ of the People's Chamber operating between sessions of the latter, and fulfils all fundamental tasks resulting from its laws and decisions. It is elected by the People's Chamber at its first session and is responsible to it for its activities. It deals with bills to be submitted to the People's Chamber and deals with all basic tasks arising from its laws and decisions. It convenes the sessions of the People's Chamber, and issues the writ for elections to the People's Chamber and other representative bodies. It makes fundamental decisions on defence matters and exercises control over the constitutionality and legality of the activities of the Supreme Court and the Prosecutor General. It determines military and diplomatic ranks and other special titles and establishes state honours. It also exercises the right of amnesty and pardon.

The Council of Ministers (Ministerrat) (Articles 78-80)

The Council of Ministers organizes, on behalf of the People's Chamber, the execution of the political, economic, cultural, social and military tasks of the socialist state. It issues regulations and decisions within the framework of the laws and co-ordinates and controls the activities of ministries and other central state organs. Its Chairman and members are elected by the People's Chamber for a period of four years and it forms the Presidium of the Council of Ministers from its own ranks. The Council of Ministers is responsible and accountable to the People's Chamber. After the electoral term has expired the Council of Ministers continues its work until the new one has been elected.

Local People's Representative Bodies and their Organs (Articles 81-85)

The elected organs of state power in the districts, towns, regions, municipal boroughs and local communities are responsible for deciding on all local issues on the basis of law. The local people's representative bodies draw up and implement the economic plan and budget for their areas, and have their own income. Their decisions are binding and must be published. All such bodies elect their own councils and committees.

IV SOCIALIST ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE AND LEGALITY

(Articles 86-107)

The Constitution is direct and valid law and legal regulations may not contradict it. Details of all laws and binding regulations are published, and at no time may organs other than those provided by the Constitution be allowed to exercise state power. The citizens' participation in the administration of justice is guaranteed and it is the joint concern of socialist society to combat all violations of the law. Laws on the punishment of crimes against peace, humanity and war crimes correspond to the generally recognized norms of international law.

The administration of justice in the Republic is exercised by the Supreme Court, the District Courts, the Regional Courts and the social courts. In military matters jurisdiction is exercised by the Supreme Court, military tribunals and military courts. The Supreme Court is the highest organ of the administration of justice and is responsible to the People's Chamber. All judges are democratically elected by the people's representative bodies or by the citizens themselves and must be men of knowledge and experience who are loyally devoted to the socialist state. The public prosecutors' office safeguards socialist legality and ensures that persons who have committed crimes are called to account before the court. The public prosecutors' office is directed by the Prosecutor General and the public prosecutors of the districts and regions are appointed by him and subordinate to him.

An act is punishable only if it was covered by penal law at the time of its commission, if the offender has acted in a culpable way and if his guilt is proved beyond doubt. Persons under arrest must be brought before a judge not later than one day after their arrest and only judges are authorized to judge the admissibility of detention on remand. Nobody may be withheld from his lawful judge and special courts are inadmissible. Every citizen has the right to be heard in court and the right to be defended by a counsel is guaranteed throughout the whole criminal procedure. Any citizen or organization has the right to submit suggestions or grievances to the state organs and may suffer no disadvantages as a result. Damages inflicted on a citizen or his personal property as a result of unlawful measures by employees of state organs are to be compensated by the state organ concerned.

V AMENDMENT OF THE CONSTITUTION

The Constitution can be amended only through a law of the People's Chamber of the German Democratic Republic which expressly amends or supplements the text of the Constitution.

JUDICIAL SYSTEM

The legal system of the German Democratic Republic was reorganized after 1945, at first under four-power direction; and the principles on which the judicial system is to function are embodied in the Constitution. Judges are elected by the people's representative bodies or by the citizens directly. State Prosecuting Counsels are nominated by the Prosecutor General. Jurisdiction is exercised by the Supreme Court, by the Bezirke Courts and by the Kreis Courts. All Courts decide on the appointment of one presiding and two assistant magistrates. The Assistant Magistrates in the first instance are jurors (lay magistrates from all classes of society); the Labour Law Tribunal of the Supreme Court appoints two official judges and three lay magistrates.

Judges are independent and subject only to the Constitution and the Legislature. A judge can be recalled only if he has committed a breach of the law, grossly neglected his duties or been convicted by a court.

Lay Magistrates are elected for a period of four years after nomination by the democratic parties and organizations. Magistrates of the Kreis Courts are directly elected by the people; Magistrates of the Bezirke Courts, by the Bezirksrat; Magistrates of the Labour Law Tribunal of the Supreme Court, by the Volkshammer. All are equally authorized Judges.

Attached to the Volkshammer is a Constitutional and Legislature Commission in which all parties are represented according to their numbers. In addition there are on the Commission three members of the Supreme Court as well as three State Law Teachers who may not be members of the Volkshammer. All members of the Constitutional and Legislature Commission are appointed by the Volkshammer.

The whole judicial and penal system was reformed on January 14th, 1968, the most important reform being the introduction of a new Criminal Code to replace the German Criminal Code of 1871. Further details will be found in the Constitution section (above).

Oberstes Gericht der Deutschen Demokratischen Republik (Supreme Court of the German Democratic Republic): 104 Berlin, Scharnhorststr. 37; Pres. Dr. HEINRICH TOEPLITZ.

Generalstaatsanwalt der Deutschen Demokratischen Republik (General State Prosecutor of the German Democratic Republic): Dr. JOSEF STREIT; 104 Berlin, Scharnhorststr. 37.

Ministerium der Justiz der Deutschen Demokratischen Republik: 108 Berlin, Clara-Zetkin-Str. 93; Minister Dr. KURT WÜNSCHE.

RELIGION

The section on Religion, dealing with both parts of Germany, will be found immediately following this chapter on the German Democratic Republic.

THE PRESS

The advent to power of the National Socialist Party in 1933 interrupted the period of press freedom which Germany had enjoyed under the Weimar Republic. When the Allies introduced their press licensing system in 1946 as a means of closely controlling the press, licences were issued in the Soviet-occupied zone to approved parties and organizations only but not to individuals wishing to publish newspapers.

In 1947 the Presseamt (Press Administration Office) was founded, closely associated with the office of the Prime Minister. Its functions were: to issue licences to approved organizations belonging to the democratic bloc; to distribute newsprint; and to give a measure of editorial direction to non-political papers. By means of this Office the government acquired a considerable degree of control over the press, reinforced by the Press Section of the Socialist Unity Party's Central Committee whose function is to issue daily instructions to editors of political papers as to which news items require emphasis and comment. This elaborate system of directives is seen as ensuring that the press serves the interest of the whole community in furthering the socialist cause by precluding the possible self-interest and irresponsibility of private individuals.

The 1968 Constitution of the German Democratic Republic guarantees the freedom of the press, radio and television, and states that every citizen of the G.D.R. has the right, "in accordance with the spirit and aims of the Constitution, to express his opinion freely and publicly.

This right is not limited by any service of employment relationship. No person may be placed at a disadvantage for exercising this right". From these statements it follows that there is no right to express an opinion which is not "in accordance with the spirit and aims of the Constitution", or, in other words, which can be interpreted as contrary to the interests and development of the Socialist state defined in the Constitution. Editors, who are personally responsible for the content of their papers, and citizens alike realize their obligations, responsibilities and dependence upon the state, society and political system in which they live. For these reasons, formal censorship is not practised.

All newspapers and periodicals are owned and managed by political or independent organizations such as party committees, trade unions, cultural associations, youth organizations, etc. Almost all dailies are controlled by or affiliated to a political party, such as Neues Deutschland (Socialist Unity Party), Der Morgen (Liberal Democratic Party), and National Zeitung (National Democratic Party). A notable exception is the officially independent Berliner Zeitung. Tribüne is the organ of the Trade Unions League. The Free German Youth publishes the daily Junge Welt and the weekly Forum. The official news agency, the Allgemeiner Deutscher Nachrichtendienst, became a state monopoly in 1946.

About 40 dailies appear in the G.D.R., with a total circulation of about 8 million. There are over 200 periodicals and illustrated magazines, covering a wide range of subjects. They embody considerably less variety in format and presentation than the corresponding Federal German press. There is no sensational popular press and though most papers' news coverage is quite serious, the breadth of coverage is restricted by the policy, enunciated by Neues Deutschland, of concentrating on news judged to be of interest and value to the public.

The most important and influential dailies are those published by the Socialist Unity Party, headed by Neues Deutschland in Berlin, and by the Berlin organs of the other parties mentioned above. Though circulation figures are often not disclosed, a very popular paper is Berliner Zeitung am Abend. Leading dailies outside Berlin are Sächsisches Tageblatt (Dresden), Leipziger Volkszeitung (Leipzig), Freie Presse (Karl-Marx-Stadt), and Freiheit (Halle).

The daily press is more influential, particularly in political matters, than the weekly press and periodicals. Outstanding amongst these latter categories are Sonntag and Forum, the popular Neue Berliner Illustrierte and the women's Für Dich.

RELIGION

(This section covers both parts of Germany.)

THE PROTESTANT CHURCH

German Protestantism is mainly of Lutheran origin with strong Calvinistic elements in some areas, and three main confessional groups—the Evangelical-Lutheran, the Evangelical-Reformed, and the United Confessional—have emerged among the Protestant population. In spite of confessional differences, these Churches have similar constitutional structures: the smallest community is the parish, with its church council and pastor (Pfarrer or Pastor). Several parishes form a church district headed by a Dean (Dehan), a Provost (Propst), or a Superintendent; the districts are united in the Territorial Church (Landeskirche), whose governing organs are the Synod, the Bishop or Church President (Kirchenpräsident) and the Church Council (Landeskirchenrat) or the Church Office (Landeskirchenamt). The episcopal office is of primarily administrative importance and does not imply that the Bishop receives a higher form of ordination than the pastor.

At the Conference of Eisenach (Thuringia) in 1948 the twenty-seven Protestant Territorial Churches and the Evangelical Church of the Union gave themselves a new constitution, by which the Evangelische Kirche in Deutschland was established as a federation of Churches. The Federation was estimated to number about 42 million adherents, of whom about 28 million live in the Federal Republic, including West Berlin. Fifty and a half per cent of the population of the Federal Republic and about 80 per cent of that of the Democratic Republic are members of the Evangelische Kirche, which tends to claim a greater following in Northern and Central Germany.

Outside the E.K.D. are numerous small Evangelical Free Churches, such as the Baptists, Methodists, Mennonites and the Lutheran Free Church, with a membership of approximately 400,000 in all.

During the autumn of 1969 the E.K.D. and V.E.L.K. in the German Democratic Republic, but not the E.K.U., declared themselves organizationally independent of the churches in the Federal Republic. The Bund der Evangelischen Kirchen in der Deutschen Demokratischen Republik corresponds to the E.K.D., and the V.E.L.K. D.D.R. corresponds to V.E.L.K.D.

EVANGELISCHE KIRCHE IN DEUTSCHLAND

(The Evangelical Church in Germany)

The governing bodies of the E.K.D. are its Synod of Clergy and lay members which meets at regular intervals, and the Council, composed of fifteen elected members. The E.K.D. has an ecclesiastical secretariat of its own (the Evangelical Church Chancellery), and a special office for external relations.

Chairman of the Council: Bishop D. H. DIETZFELBINGER; 8 Munich, Meiserstr. 13.

Synod of the E.K.D.: 3 Hannover-Herrenhausen, Herrenhäuserstr. 2A; Pres. Prof. D. Dr. LUDWIG RAISER.

Chairman: Präses P. TIBBE.

Herrnhuter Brüdergemeine or Europäisch-Festländische Brüder-Unität (The Moravian Church): The Moravian Church was founded in Moravia in 1457 as one of the earliest of the Reformation movements. After many years of persecution in 1722 the rest of its members found refuge in Herrnhut, Saxony, whence their name. Their schools have a great tradition in Germany, Switzerland and the Netherlands. At present there are 20 congregations in Germany, Switzerland, Denmark and the Netherlands with approximately 11,900 members. The Herrnhut Brethren are in close contact with correspondent churches in Great Britain, U.S.A., East and South Africa, the Caribbean area and Surinam; publs. Brüderbote (monthly), Herrnhuter Arbeit daheim und draussen (quarterly).

Chairman: Pfr. HELMUT BINTZ (7325 Bad Boll, Württemberg).

Reformierter Bund (The Reformed League): f. 1884; unites the Reformed territorial Churches and Congregations of Germany. The central body of the Reformed League is the "Moderamen", the elected representation of the various Reformed Congregations. The President of the "Moderamen" is the Moderator.

Moderator: D. WILHELM NIESEL, D.D. (624 Königstein, Altkönigstr. 35).

Bekennende Kirche (The Confessing Church): is not an established Church, but a renaissance movement which arose out of the struggles with the Nazi régime. It has adherents in all Protestant Churches. The Confessing Church is guided by the Council of the Brethren of the E.K.D. and the Council of each territorial church.

Chairman: (vacant).

GIBRALTAR

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag

Gibraltar is a narrow peninsula running southwards from the south-west coast of Spain to which it is connected by a sandy isthmus about one mile long and a half-mile wide. The Rock, as it is often called, is situated in latitude 36° 7' N. and longitude 5° 21' W. and runs from north to south for a length of nearly three miles. It is three-quarters of a mile wide and has a total area of two and a quarter square miles. Five miles across the Bay to the west lies the Spanish port of Algeciras and 20 miles across the Straits, to the south, is Africa. The Mediterranean lies to the east. The climate is temperate, snow or frost being extremely rare. The mean minimum and maximum temperatures during the winter are 7°C. (45°F.) and 18°C. (65°F.) respectively and during the summer they are 13°C. (55°F.) and 29°C. (85°F.) respectively; the average annual rainfall is 35 inches. The official language is English though the population is bilingual in English and Spanish. Seventy seven per cent of the population are Roman Catholic, 8 per cent are Moslem and 8 per cent Church of England. The flag bears the Gibraltar coat of arms (Castle and Key) on a background the upper two thirds of which are white and the lower third red.

Recent History

The post-war years have been marked by considerable progress socially and economically through intensive development of the medical, educational, housing and social security services, and by the expansion of business and the encouragement of tourism. There has also been considerable constitutional development resulting in partial self-government since 1964.

The Spanish Government lays claim to Gibraltar as an integral part of her territory, whilst Britain maintains that the Treaty of Utrecht (1713) granted to Britain sovereignty over Gibraltar in perpetuity. Since 1963 the Spanish Government has intensified its campaign through the United Nations, for the cession of Gibraltar to Spain and, when Britain failed to comply with the UN deadline for decolonization, imposed certain restrictions on Gibraltar. These include closing the land frontier, imposing an air space ban affecting aircraft landing at Gibraltar, removing the Algeciras Ferry (the only remaining means of direct access to Spain), withdrawing the Spanish labour force and cutting off telephone and telegraphic communications with Spain.

In pursuance of a UN resolution stating that the interests of the people of Gibraltar should be taken into account in the talks, Britain held a referendum in September 1967 in which the overwhelming majority (12,138 to 44) voted for retaining their link with the U.K. rather than passing under Spanish sovereignty. This was followed by the drafting of a new Constitution, promulgated in 1969, in which the British Government has given an undertaking to the people of Gibraltar never to hand them over to another State against their freely and democratically expressed wishes.

During 1970 the Spanish Foreign Minister again repeated Spain's undying determination to re-establish sovereignty over Gibraltar. He said that no lasting friendship between the United Kingdom and Spain would be possible until a "final solution" was found.

He reiterated the demand in 1971, with the additional claim that the presence of a foreign military base on Gibraltar constituted a possible danger to Spain in time of war. Britain continues to insist on the Gibraltarians' right to choose their own nationality, but discussions on sovereignty took place between the Spanish and British foreign ministers in New York during 1971, followed by talks in Madrid in early 1972.

Gibraltar is to join the EEC with the U.K. on 1st January, 1973, under the Treaty of Rome provisions made for external, dependant territories of member countries, but at her own request will not be included in the customs area.

Government

Under the Gibraltar (Constitution) Order in Council, 1964, Gibraltar attained a large measure of internal self-government.

This Order has now been superseded by the Gibraltar Constitution Order 1969 which gives Ministers certain responsibilities in defined domestic matters. Executive authority is vested in the Governor, who is advised by the Gibraltar Council composed of five elected and four ex-officio members. Council of Ministers is presided over by the Chief Minister.

Under the new Constitution the Legislative and City Councils have been merged to form the Gibraltar House of Assembly consisting of a Speaker appointed by the Governor, fifteen elected members, and two ex-officio members.

Elections take place every four years.

Defence

There is a local Defence Force—The Gibraltar Regiment—which, following the abolition of conscription, is being reorganized as a Volunteer Reserve Unit. Its complement will be 18 officers and 211 soldiers. United Kingdom Naval, Army and Air Force Units are stationed at Gibraltar which is also a NATO Sub-Command. In August 1965, a Headquarters Unit of the Royal Naval Reserve was formed to assist in manning the Maritime Headquarters in Gibraltar.

Economic Affairs

Owing to the absence of natural resources, the chief factors in the economy are the thriving tourist industry, the operation of the Admiralty Dockyard, services supplied to shipping and the re-export of manufactured goods.

Since her isolation from Spain, Gibraltar has had to diversify her economy, and many Gibraltarians have adopted second jobs. The tourist industry has adapted to attract long-stay visitors, while the port facilities are being extended to accommodate deeper draughted vessels and attract more merchant shipping in addition to military vessels. Further light industry has been introduced and work has begun on a semi-industrialized housing project on reclaimed land. The building industry, in particular, benefits from Government training schemes introduced to compensate for the loss of Spanish skilled workers, and a £15 million building programme, partially financed by a British Government loan, is under way for the period 1971-76.

For the period 1970-73 a development programme is in train involving expenditure of approximately £4 million in the public sector. The most important items continue to be the provision of housing and improvements to the social services; a hostel for immigrant workers has already been completed. In the private sector two blocks of flats and two hotels of 200 and 500 beds are under construction. British aid to Gibraltar during the financial year ended March 1971 amounted to approximately £1,245,000.

Transport and Communications

The Port offers good anchorage for ships of all tonnages. Wharf space is ample for both landing passengers and handling cargo, and there are dry dock facilities and a commercial ship repair yard. Tax concessions are available to ship-owners who register their ships at Gibraltar. Since the closure of the Suez Canal sea communication with North European and Mediterranean ports is limited, and there are now no regular passenger services, though P. and O. and British India lines make occasional calls. However some 130 cruise ships per annum call at Gibraltar and will on occasion take passengers, and a passenger and car-ferry service operates between Gibraltar and Tangier on week-days. Air services are frequent to the United Kingdom and Tangier, and weekly to Madrid. On Gibraltar bus services and taxis run, but no railway.

Social Welfare

The Social Security system consists of two contributory schemes covering employment injuries insurance and social insurance and three non-contributory schemes financed from the general revenue and covering unemployment benefits and retirement pensions, family allowances and supplementary benefits. There are special arrangements to cater for blind persons, the aged and discharged prisoners.

Education

Education is compulsory between the ages of 5 and 15. There are 21 Government schools, where it is provided free, 2 private schools and a number of nursery schools. Scholarships for university students are provided by the Government and from private sources.

Tourism

The airport and sea facilities have made Gibraltar a centre of communications for the West Mediterranean countries and North Africa. The restriction of land communications with Spain has stimulated the development of Gibraltar as a tourist centre in its own right, where the transient visitor is being replaced by the long-stay tourist and package holidays are increasing. The expansion of hotels and the casino, the improvement of beaches and the provision of amenities have all contributed to this change. Conference facilities are being provided including a conference hall with 160 seats already in use in one of the large hotels. Cruise traffic is growing, and the virtually duty-free shopping facilities in Gibraltar have led to an increase in the number of cruise passengers taking excursions ashore.

Visas are not required except for: (a) stateless persons, (b) nationals of Albania, Bulgaria, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Chinese People's Republic, German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, North Korea, North Viet-Nam, Poland, Romania and the Soviet Union, who will not, however, require visas when travelling in direct transit by air.

Sport

There is a great variety of sport including fishing, swimming, and water-skiing, football, hockey, tennis, athletics, rowing and cricket.

Public Holidays

1973: January 1 (New Year's Day).

Weights and Measures

Imperial weights and measures are in use (see United Kingdom).

Currency

The Gibraltar Pound is at par with the Pound Sterling. Local Government currency notes are issued in denominations of £5 and £1, but U.K. notes also circulate.

U.K. coinage is legal tender and in addition a Gibraltar coin of 25p.

THE CONSTITUTION

Gibraltar is a Crown Colony, and the supreme authority is vested in the Governor and Commander-in-Chief, who is the representative of the Queen. Relations with the British Government are maintained through the Foreign and Commonwealth Office.

In 1830 the first Charter of Justice was given to the City and a Magistracy established; thus the advantage of civil liberty was accorded to the inhabitants.

On December 1st, 1921, the creation of the City Council gave the inhabitants of Gibraltar a certain representation in the management of municipal affairs. The City Council was reconstituted on August 1st, 1945, when provision was made for an unofficial majority.

A Legislative Council, defined by an Order-in-Council of February 3rd, 1950, was inaugurated by H.R.H. The Duke of Edinburgh on November 23rd, 1950. It established a Legislative Council consisting of the Governor as President, three ex-officio members, two members nominated by the Governor, and five elected members. In 1956 the number of elected members was increased from five to seven and a Speaker was appointed in 1958. In September 1959 the life of the legislature was increased from three to five years. The Gibraltar (Constitution) Order, 1964, and the Gibraltar Royal Instructions provided for a Legislative Council consisting of a Speaker, eleven elected members and two ex-officio members. Election was by proportional representation, and the franchise is given to all adult British Subjects ordinarily resident in Gibraltar for a continuous period of twelve months, though provision is made for the registration of electors who may be resident in neighbouring Spanish territory during part of the qualifying period. At the fifth elections, held in September 1964, 10,342 votes were polled out of a total electorate of 13,564. From the eleven members elected to the Legislative Council, the Governor, after consultation with the Chief Minister, nominated five to serve in the Gibraltar Council. The ex-officio members of the Legislative Council were the Attorney-General and the Financial Secretary. Reserve powers enabled the Governor to legislate if he considered it necessary or expedient in the interests of public order, public faith or good government (including defence).

Following a Constitutional Conference held in July 1968 a new Constitution was introduced in 1969. The Constitution contains a code of human rights and provides for its enforcement by the Courts of Gibraltar. The Legislative and City Councils were merged to produce an enlarged legislature known as the Gibraltar House of Assembly. Matters of domestic concern are devolved to ministers, with Britain responsible for matters which directly relate to external affairs, defence and internal security. The Governor has special powers, in exceptional circumstances, to refuse any advice from the Gibraltar Council which may not be in the interests of maintaining financial and economic stability.

THE GIBRALTAR COUNCIL

Gibraltar is administered in accordance with the Gibraltar (Constitution) Order, 1969 and the Gibraltar Royal Instructions, 1969 by the Governor acting generally on the advice of the Gibraltar Council consisting of four ex-officio and five elected members who are appointed by the Governor after consultation with the Chief Minister.

COUNCIL OF MINISTERS

The Council of Ministers, which is presided over by the Chief Minister, deals with domestic matters which have been defined as such under the Constitution. Heads of Departments and other government officials appearing before it when required.

HOUSE OF ASSEMBLY

With the coming into force of the Gibraltar Constitution Order 1969 and Royal Instructions 1969 on August 11th, 1969, the Legislative and City Councils were merged to form the Gibraltar House of Assembly.

This is composed of a Speaker, 15 elected members and two ex-officio members.

Elections take place every four years.

GREECE

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Kingdom of Greece is a mountainous peninsula between the Mediterranean and Aegean, bounded to the north by Albania, Yugoslavia and Bulgaria and to the east by Turkey. Numerous Greek islands lie to the south and south-east, of which the largest is Crete. The climate is Mediterranean with mild winters and hot summers. The language is modern Greek, of which there are two forms—kapheresouwa, the formal language, and demotiki, the language commonly spoken. The flag consists of blue and white horizontal stripes with a white cross in the top-left corner. The Greek Orthodox Church is the established religion. The capital is Athens.

Recent History

The resistance of the Greeks against the Italian invasion in 1940 gained them the admiration of the world, but the country was occupied by Germany in 1941. After the liberation by British forces, King George II returned and was succeeded in 1947 by Paul I. Internal troubles followed, caused by opposition to the monarchy and poor economic conditions, and civil war lasted until 1949.

After four consecutive terms in office since 1955, Konstantine Karamanlis resigned as Prime Minister in June 1963 in protest against the Greek Royal visit to Britain, and was succeeded by George Papandreou in the election of November 1963. After a series of short-lived cabinets, a non-political administration held office from December 1966, which was charged with the organization of a General Election in May 1967. This was forestalled in April 1967 by the bloodless coup d'état of a military junta in which Colonel George Papadopoulos played a prominent part. Mr. Konstantine Kollias was made Prime Minister. The King failed to overthrow the junta in December 1967, and fled to Rome. Meanwhile Papadopoulos took over as Prime Minister and promised a plebiscite and quick return to democratic rule. Negotiations began between the Government and the King for his return to Greece. In August 1968 there was an unsuccessful attempt to assassinate Col. Papadopoulos.

A new constitution, drafted in July 1968, was approved by a large majority in a national referendum on September 29th and, with the exception of twelve articles, took immediate effect. These articles, however, related mainly to individual rights, and although some have been restored to the Constitution, eight remain suspended and the timetable for their restoration has now been abandoned. In December 1969 Greece withdrew from the Council of Europe; this action was preceded by indications from the majority of the member countries that they would vote for Greece's suspension if democracy and "normal democratic freedoms" were not immediately restored. The first elections since the military coup were held in November 1970 for a new Legislative Advisory Committee; candidates and voters were restricted and both had to be selected by the Government. A similar system was employed at a second election held in December 1971 to replace the committee previously elected. Cabinet reshuffles in June 1970, August 1971 and January 1972 are seen to have strengthened Col. Papadopoulos's position.

Government

Greece is a constitutional monarchy. In April 1967 the Chamber of Deputies was suspended by the ruling military junta, but constitutional monarchy was retained. On the flight of the King after his abortive coup d'état General Zoitakis was named "Regent". Executive power is at present exercised by the military junta and the Cabinet appointed by them. Following the approval of the new Constitution by a national referendum the Prime Minister promised a gradual return to democracy.

Defence

Greece is a member of NATO. Military service is compulsory and lasts two years. The armed forces number 159,000, consisting of an Army of 118,000, a Navy of 18,000 and an Air Force of 23,000; there is a Gendarmerie of 23,000 and also a force of 200,000 trained reservists. Defence estimates for 1972 totalled 14,854 million drachmae.

Economic Affairs

Greece has traditionally been an agricultural nation, producing most of its own needs and exporting a considerable amount of produce. Although only about a quarter of the land is cultivable, the rest being mountain and marshland, Greece produces large quantities of wheat, barley, maize, tobacco, sugar beet, tomatoes and other fruit. Principal exports include tobacco, olive oil, cotton, citrus fruits and wine. In 1970 agricultural production rose by 7.5 per cent and accounted for 18.6 per cent of the national income, while industry accounted for 31.1 per cent.

The pace of industrial expansion has quickened since Greece became an associate member of the European Economic Community in 1961, and despite a setback following the army coup in 1967, industrial production now exceeds that of agriculture. Among the mineral deposits which are exploited are coal, iron, chromite, zinc, bauxite and silver. Recently hydro-electric power resources have been developed. Industrial exports include mineral products, manufactured goods and chemicals. A large proportion of Greek trade is with the Federal Republic of Germany, and other important trading countries are France, Italy, the United Kingdom and the U.S.A.

A large balance of trade deficit has long been a feature of the Greek economy, but this has usually been offset by "invisibles"—income from tourism, earnings of the large merchant fleet and remittances from Greek workers abroad. Despite a 15.4 per cent growth in exports in 1970, the trade deficit increased to $1,083 million, while "invisibles" rose by 23.5 per cent to $673 million. Long term economic development is laid down in the Five-Year Plan (1968–1973); major targets of this plan are a rise in national income at an annual rate of 7.7 per cent, a rise in productivity of 6.4 per cent annually, with particular emphasis placed upon industrial production. Overall growth of the national income was 7.7 per cent in 1969, 7.5 per cent in 1970 and 7.6 per cent in 1971, when per capita income passed the $1,000 mark.

Transport and Communications

Although Greece's railways were almost completely destroyed during the Second World War, there is now 2,573 km. of track. A network of over 51,000 km. of roads now covers the country, but many of these are unclassified; there are nearly 8,000 km. of main roads and 27,000 km. of secondary roads. The three-mile Corinth Canal shortens the sea journey from the Adriatic to Piraeus (port of Athens) by 202 miles. Greece has a large mercantile marine of nearly 15 million tons. Important towns and islands are connected by air transport.

Social Welfare

There is a state social insurance scheme for wage-earners. Salaried staff are provided for by voluntary or staff insurances. Everyone is entitled to an old-age pension and sickness benefit.

Education

Education is free at all levels, and compulsory for all children between the ages of 6 and 15. Just under one million children receive primary education and some 403,000 secondary. The illiteracy rate has been reduced from 42 per cent to less than 10 per cent in the last thirty years. There are five universities, including one at Jannina, founded in 1966. The 1972 budget devoted 8,723 million drachmae, representing 10.5 per cent of total expenditure.

Tourism

The sunny climate, the natural beauty of the country and its great history and traditions have made Greece a magnet for tourists. There are numerous islands of archaeological interest. Increased facilities are being provided for tourists in the form of better transport and accommodation. In 1971 nearly 2,200,000 people visited Greece, and the total was expected to reach three million in 1972.

Receipts from tourism exceeded $283 million in 1971, reflecting a growth of more than 58 per cent over 1970.

Visas are not required for nationals of the following countries: Australia, Austria, Argentina, Bahrain, Belgium, Bolivia, Brazil, British Honduras, Canada, Chile, Columbia, Costa Rica, Cyprus, Denmark, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, Finland, France, German Federal Republic, Ghana, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, Iceland, Iran, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Kenya, Liechtenstein, Luxembourg, Malawi, Mexico, Monaco, Morocco, The Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Portugal, Qatar, San Marino, South Africa, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, Tanzania, Tunisia, Turkey, United Arab Emirates, U.K., U.S.A., Uruguay, Venezuela, Zambia.

THE CONSTITUTION

CONSTITUTIONAL monarchy was instituted in Greece when the first Constitution was granted by King Otho on September 3rd, 1843. Formerly known as Prince Otto of Bavaria, he ascended the throne at the age of 18 in 1833, three years after Greece achieved her full independence from Turkey. Revolution, reaction, and foreign embroilment shook the country repeatedly. In 1862 Otho was expelled and his place was taken in 1863 by Prince William, the younger son of the King of Denmark, who assumed the title of George I. The dynasty was shaken by the ascent to the throne of his son Constantine in 1913. King George II, who came to the throne when his father, Constantine, abdicated in 1922, was compelled to leave the country on December 19th, 1923. The dethronement of the dynasty was proclaimed by the Papanastasiou Government in 1924, as a result of the crisis brought on by the disastrous termination of the Asia Minor expedition in 1922. A plebiscite held on April 13th, 1924, confirmed the republican régime, and the republican Constitution was formally promulgated in 1927.

On the restoration of the monarchy in the person of King George II in 1935, after a plebiscite, the 1863 Constitution, as amended in 1911, was again adopted, with certain changes, of which the most important was the institution of the Council of State. This supreme administrative tribunal, formed on the French model, examines the validity of decrees and tries cases between the State and private individuals, thus forming an important bulwark against arbitrary State action on the part of Government officials or departments.

Parliamentary government in accordance with the Constitution continued until August 4th, 1936, when certain basic provisions of the Constitution were suspended by the Prime Minister, General Ioannis Metaxas, with the consent of the King. This action had been preceded by a period of political deadlock and internal unrest. The Metaxas Government assumed dictatorial powers, dissolved Parliament, and suspended the main provisions of the Constitution which had hitherto protected the liberties of the Greek people, such as the freedom of the Press, freedom of assembly, parliamentary and municipal elections, habeas corpus, etc.

The dictatorship of General Metaxas lasted until the occupation of Greece by the Axis Powers in 1941. The parliamentary system was restored after the liberation of Greece in 1944. The Constitution was re-established, and the first elections held since January 1936 took place on March 31st, 1946. A revised Constitution was promulgated on January 1st, 1952. This Constitution left the fundamental provisions of the 1911 Constitution intact. The military junta headed by Col. George Papadopoulos which seized power in April 1967 suspended the constitution, but promised a quick return to democratic government.

The text of a new Constitution, consisting of 138 Articles and replacing the Constitution of 1952, was published in Athens on July 11th, 1968. It was then stated that it would be submitted to a national referendum on September 29th and would be brought into force in stages. The new draft Constitution was approved by the Greek Cabinet on September 14th, with certain amendments as set out below. The 12 Articles which will be temporarily held in abeyance relate to the holding of public meetings, formation of political parties, freedom of the Press, and inviolability of domicile. Voting in the constitutional referendum took place on September 29th and was compulsory. The result was a large majority for the new Constitution. The Prime Minister, Mr. Papadopoulos, promised a gradual return to democracy and that the suspension of Articles in the new Constitution would be only provisional.

THE CONSTITUTION

(Text of the new Constitution published on July 11th, 1968, in force November 15th, 1968.)

GENERAL PROVISIONS

The established religion in Greece is that of the Eastern Orthodox Church of Christ. The form of Government in Greece is that of a Crowned Democracy. The legislative power is exercised by the King and Parliament; the executive power by the King and the Government; the judicial power by the courts, judicial decisions being executed in the name of the King. (Articles 1-3.)

THE STATE AND THE INDIVIDUAL

Every person within the territorial boundaries of the Greek State shall enjoy full protection of his life, honour and freedom, irrespective of nationality, creed or language. Exceptions are permitted in such cases as provided for by International Law. Every person has the right to the free development of his personality provided he does not infringe on the rights of others and does not violate constitutional order and the moral code. Personal liberty is inviolable. No one is persecuted, arrested, imprisoned or otherwise restricted, except when and as the law provides. With the exception of persons caught in the act of committing an offence, no one shall be arrested or imprisoned without a judicial warrant stating the reasons, which must be served at the moment of arrest or imprisonment pending trial. (Articles 8-10.)

The home of each person is inviolable. No house search can take place except in a time and manner provided by law. (Article 13.)

Everyone may express orally, in writing, in print or in any other way his thoughts, with due adherence to the laws of the State. The press is free and discharges a public function involving rights and duties and responsibility for the accuracy of its content. Censorship and every other preventive measure shall be prohibited. Seizure of printed matter, either before or after publication is prohibited. By exception seizure after circulation is permitted by order of the public prosecutor: (a) because of insult to the Christian and any other known religion; (b) because of insult to the person of the King, the Crown Prince, their wives and children; (c) because of a publication which discloses information on the organization, composition, armament and deployment of the armed forces, or on the fortifications of the country; is patently rebellious, or aims at overthrowing the régime, or the existing social system; or is directed against the territorial integrity of the Country or creates defeatism, or constitutes an instigation or attempt to commit a crime of high treason; intends to project or diffuse for political exploitation views of outlawed parties or organizations, and (d) because of indecent publications manifestly offending public decency in cases provided by law. (Article 14.) The secrecy of letters and of all other means of correspondence is inviolable. The freedom of religious conscience is inviolable. Elementary education shall be free and compulsory for all. (Articles 15-17.)

The Greeks have the right to assemble peacefully and unarmed as provided by law. The State may take protective measures for public gatherings, the organization of which must be duly notified forty-eight hours before they are affected. Open air gatherings may be prohibited if they endanger public order and security. The Greeks have the right to form associations with due adherence to the laws of the State. Every union of persons, the purpose or the activity of which is directed against the territorial integrity of the Country or the principles of the régime or the social order or the security of the State or the political or civil liberties of the citizen, shall be prohibited. It is dissolved by Court decree. Resort to strike for the purpose of achieving political or other ends unrelated to the material or moral interests of the workers shall be prohibited. (Articles 18 and 19.)

The exercise of civil rights and liberties shall be reserved to everyone within limits securing the enjoyment of the same rights and liberties by other citizens and protecting the interests of the society as a whole. Whoever abuses the inviolability of a home, the freedom of expression, especially in print, the secrecy of the means of correspondence, the freedom of assembly, the freedom of forming associations or co-operatives, and the right of property, for the purpose of combatting the political system of crowned democracy, the civil liberties, or of endangering the national independence and territorial integrity of the Country, shall be deprived of these rights or of all rights safeguarded under the present Constitution. The deprivation and the extent thereof shall be pronounced by the Constitutional Court as provided by law. (Article 24.)

In the case of war, mobilization due to external dangers or serious disturbance or patent threat to the public order and security of the Country from internal dangers, the King on the recommendation of the Council of Ministers may suspend by Royal Decree throughout the Country or in part thereof the operation of articles 10, 12b, 13, 14, 15, 18, 19, 111 and 112 of the Constitution or some of them and put into effect the then applicable law on "State of Siege" and to establish extraordinary tribunals. This law may not be modified while in operation. (Article 25.)

SOCIAL AND ECONOMIC RIGHTS AND DUTIES

Marriage and the family are under the protection of the State. The parents have the right and duty to raise and educate their children. The State shall take measures for the moral, intellectual and patriotic education of the minors. The State cares for the securing of employment; determines general conditions thereof and aims at the material and moral uplifting of the workers. The State cares for the creation of prerequisites and incentives for the development of the economy on national and regional scale to the end of securing a steady improvement of the living conditions of the people. (Articles 26-28.)

THE ORGANIZATION OF THE STATE

THE KING

The King is the Supreme Authority of the State, the symbol of the unity of the Nation. The King and Crown Prince attain majority on completing the twenty-first year of their age; both must profess the faith of the Eastern Orthodox Church of Christ. The Government looks to it that the Crown Prince receives an education suitable to the high office for which he is destined. (Articles 30 and 31.) With the exception of the King and the Crown Prince, no other member of the Royal Family is entitled to any allowance from the Public Treasury. (Article 34.)

SUCCESSION TO THE THRONE AND REGENCY

The Greek Crown and its constitutional rights are hereditary and pass to the legitimate and lawful direct lineal descendants of the then reigning King in the order of primogeniture, preference being given to males. In the lack of such heirs, to the descendants of King George the First in the same order. (Article 35.)

Should there be no successor to the Throne in accordance with Article 35, the King appoints such with the consent of Parliament, convened for the purpose and by a vote of two-thirds of the total number of Deputies taken by open ballot. (Article 36.)

In the event of vacancy of the Throne, the royal authority is temporarily exercised by a three-member Regency, comprised of the President of Parliament, the President of the Constitutional Court and the President of the Council of State. Within two months at the latest from the date the Throne has been vacant, representatives, equal in number to the Deputies, are selected by those citizens having the right to vote as the law provides. These representatives, convening together with the Parliament, elect the King by a majority of two-thirds of the total number taken by open ballot. (Article 37.)

In the event of death or abdication of the King, if the Crown Prince is a minor, the Parliament shall convene, even if its term has expired or it has been dissolved, and shall elect a guardian by absolute majority of its entire number of members taken by open ballot. The guardian must be a Greek citizen of the Eastern Orthodox faith. (Article 39.)

POWERS OF THE KING

No act whatsoever of the King shall be valid nor shall it be executed, unless it is countersigned by the competent Minister, who by his signature alone is made responsible. The King shall appoint the Prime Minister and on his recommendation shall appoint and dismiss the members of the Government, which must enjoy the confidence of the Parliament. After general elections, the King shall appoint the leader of the party having the absolute majority in Parliament, as Prime Minister. If no party has an absolute majority, Parliament shall propose a Prime Minister, and the King shall be bound to appoint the one recommended by absolute majority vote of all members of Parliament. If no one obtains the absolute majority, the King shall then appoint the Prime Minister after first having obtained the opinion of the Council of the Nation. (Articles 42 and 43.)

The King shall have the power to suspend the work of the parliamentary session only once, by either postponing the opening or interrupting its continuation. The suspension cannot last more than thirty days and cannot be repeated during the same parliamentary session without the consent of Parliament. The King may dissolve Parliament after taking the opinion of the Council of the Nation, but the Royal decree to this effect must be counter signed by the Council of Ministers and provide for the holding of elections within 45 days. (Articles 45 and 46.)

A Bill voted on by the Parliament, but not signed and published within a month by the King, is again submitted to Parliament, and if the Parliament passes it again by absolute majority of all its members, the King shall sign, promulgate and publish it as law within a month. (Article 47.)

The King shall head the armed forces, the administration of which is exercised by the Government. (Article 49.)

The King can in certain instances convoke the Council of the Nation, under his own chairmanship. The Council of the Nation shall be comprised of the Prime Minister, the Speaker of the Parliament, the leaders of the parties in Parliament, the Presidents of the Constitutional Court, the Council of State and the Supreme Court, the Prime Ministers who had served during the last decade and had received a vote of confidence in Parliament, the Chief of the General Staff of National Defence and the Rectors of the Universities of Athens and Thessaloniki and of the National Metsovion Polytechnic Institute. (Article 54.)

GREECE—(THE CONSTITUTION)

ELECTION AND CONSTITUTION OF THE PARLIAMENT

The Parliament is elected through direct, universal and secret ballot by those citizens who have completed their twenty-first year of age and have the right to vote; voting is obligatory.

There shall be a maximum of 150 Deputies. A majority of these shall be elected from electoral districts, of which there must not be less than 10 nor more than 15; each electoral district shall return not less than five Deputies, based on its population. In addition to the elected Deputies, not less than one-sixth nor more than one-fifth of the total number of Deputies shall be chosen, in a manner to be specified by law, from lists of candidates nominated by the political parties and on the basis of each party's electoral strength. The party lists shall be deposited with the Constitutional Court and published at least eight days before the elections. Candidates appearing on these lists may not also stand as candidates in the electoral districts. A party or coalition of parties which has not accumulated a certain percentage of the total valid ballots shall not be entitled to representation in Parliament. This percentage fixed by law cannot be higher than one-sixth and lower than one-tenth for the parties, and not higher than one-third and lower than one-fourth for the coalitions of parties. (Articles 56 and 57.)

Political parties shall be founded freely by Greek citizens having the right to vote. These parties through their activity shall express the will of the people and must contribute to the advancement of the national interest. The organization, the programme and the activity of the parties must be governed by national and democratic principles. The Charter of every party must be approved by the Constitutional Court and no party shall have the right to participate in elections if its Charter has not had this approval. The political parties shall be required to maintain records of income and expenses. The Constitutional Court shall have the right to dissolve any party whatsoever whenever it ascertains serious violations of the Constitution or the laws. Political parties whose aims or activities are manifestly or covertly opposed to the fundamental principles of the form of government or tend to overthrow the existing social system or endanger the territorial integrity of the Country or its public security shall be outlawed and dissolved by decision of the Constitutional Court. The Deputies of the party being dissolved shall be declared deposed of their office, and the seats held by them in Parliament shall remain vacant until the termination of the parliamentary period. (Article 58.)

The Deputies shall be elected for five consecutive years commencing from the day of the general elections. In order to be eligible for Deputy, the candidate must be a Greek citizen, must have completed his 25th year of age on the day of election, must be eligible to vote in accordance with the law, must be enrolled in an electoral list, and must possess at least a high school, general or vocational education diploma. No one may be elected Deputy for four continuous parliamentary periods, except for those who served as parliamentary Prime Ministers, or leaders of parties recognized according to the Constitution and the Rules of Parliament. Civil servants, regular officers of the armed forces and employees of public enterprises cannot be elected deputies nor be nominated as candidates unless they resign their position prior to being nominated candidates. The duties of the Deputy shall be incompatible with the duties of a director or other representative, administrative or paid legal counsel and employee of commercial companies or enterprises enjoying special privileges or regular state subsidy based on special legislation. Those falling under any of the above categories must state their choice between the Deputy position and the above tasks within eight days after their election has been made final. The renegation of a Deputy to another party during the Parliamentary period for which he has been elected shall be prohibited and shall be considered as a resignation. A statement of party independence shall be permitted. (Articles 60-64.)

No Deputy may be prosecuted or questioned in any manner, because of an opinion or vote rendered by him during the performance of his duties as a member of the Parliament. By way of exception a Deputy shall be responsible and shall be prosecuted according to the law for insulting and defaming, slanderously or not, a person or an authority. No Deputy may be prosecuted, arrested or imprisoned during the Parliamentary session without the permission of the Body. Permission is not required for "in the act" crimes, as well as for insult and simple or slanderous defamation. (Articles 67 and 68.)

POWERS AND OPERATION OF PARLIAMENT

Articles 71 to 86 cover mainly the procedure for legislation.

THE GOVERNMENT

The number of Ministers cannot be higher than twenty. No member of the Royal Family may be appointed Minister. With the exception of the Prime Minister and the Deputy Prime Ministers, no member of Parliament may be appointed member of the Government, even though he may resign his parliamentary office. No one may be appointed as member of the Cabinet if he lacks the qualifications for Deputy. (Articles 87 and 88.)

SCOPE AND RESPONSIBILITIES

The members of the Government are collectively responsible for its general policy, each one being held personally responsible for his actions or omissions within the competence of his office.

The Government must enjoy the confidence of Parliament. Within fifteen days from the date the Prime Minister has taken the oath of office, it must seek a vote of confidence by the Parliament. Parliament may, by decision taken through an absolute majority vote of all its members, withdraw its confidence from the Government or one of its members. A motion of censure cannot be submitted except after the lapse of one year from the rejection by Parliament of such a motion, or from the approval by it of a motion of confidence submitted by the Government. A motion of censure must be undersigned by at least one-sixth of the Deputies, and the points on which discussion of the motion is to take place, must be clearly specified. By exception a motion of censure can also be submitted before the lapse of one year, if it is undersigned by the half plus one of the entire number of Deputies and is accompanied by a proposal designating a new Prime Minister. (Articles 92 and 93.)

THE COURTS

Articles 95 to 119 deal with the Constitution, powers, and functioning of the courts of justice, including the Constitutional Court, the Supreme Court, and the Courts of Appeal.

ADMINISTRATION OF THE STATE

Articles 120 to 128 deal with organizational principles of the administration and with the administrative officers of the State. Article 127 states that Parliament at the beginning of each session shall elect two legal experts of recognized professional standing, non-members of Parliament, as Commissioners of Administration, to assist in the parliamentary control and application by the administrative services of the principles of honest administration.

GREECE—(THE CONSTITUTION)

THE ARMED FORCES

The armed forces have as their mission to defend the national independence and territorial integrity of the country and the existing political and social system, against external or internal enemies. The administration of the armed forces shall be exercised by the Government through the Chief of the Armed Forces. He, as well as the Chiefs of the Army, Navy, and Air Force, is selected by the Supreme Council for National Defence. The members of the armed forces owe faith and allegiance to the country, the national ideals, and the national traditions and serve the nation. The mission and capacity of a military man is absolutely opposed to ideologies aiming at the overthrow or undermining of the existing political or social régime or the corrupting of the national conscience of the Greeks, or associated with the principles and programmes of parties outlawed. (Articles 129 and 130.)

TRANSITIONAL PROVISIONS

The Regent, who was appointed by Proclamation of the Revolutionary Committee on December 13th, 1967, shall continue to exercise his duties until such time as the first Parliamentary elections in accordance with this Constitution are held, except if the Government invites the King to return to Greece before that time. If, prior to the above time limit, the Regent ceases for any reason to exercise his duties, the Government shall appoint the new Regent. (Article 134.)

From the time this Constitution comes into effect and until the convocation of Parliament, the person exercising royal authority shall issue, on the recommendation of the Council of Ministers, legislative decrees which are not subject to the subsequent approval of Parliament.

EFFECT AND REVISION OF THE CONSTITUTION

Article 137 states that the provisions of the present Constitution which designate the form of government as a Crowned Democracy as well as the balance of the fundamental provisions thereof may never be revised. It does, however, provide for the revision of non-fundamental provisions by request of Parliament after the lapse of ten years from the approval of the Constitution by the referendum.

AMENDMENTS

(As announced by the Prime Minister on September 16th, 1968.)

The present Government will carry out the first elections and these will take place 35 days from the date the elections are decided.

The Constitution will come into effect immediately if approved by the Greek people through the September 29th Referendum, except for 12 of the 138 Articles.

The Council of the Nation will comprise only the Prime Minister, the Speaker in Parliament, the leaders of the two strongest parties in Parliament, of the Constitutional Court and the Chief of the Armed Forces.

The general provisions regarding the Monarchy remain unchanged except that the education of the Crown Prince now becomes the responsibility of both the King and the Government.

The qualification stipulated by the Draft Constitution of July 11th regarding eligibility for Parliament, that he or she must not have willingly acquired another nationality even if this was subsequently to be renounced, is now dropped.

Whereas previously the Administrative Commissioner "the ombudsman" was to have acted on instructions of the Speaker or Prime Minister, he may now act on instructions of the Speaker at the request of the Prime Minister or leader of one of the parliamentary parties.

Whereas previously a final or temporary suspension of a publication could be called for if three convictions had taken place within 10 years, it can now be imposed by Court after a second conviction within five years but only for offences under Article 14, paragraph 4.

Correspondence still remains inviolable except for reasons of national security, public order, or for investigations of crime.

POLITICAL PARTIES

At present no political parties are permitted in Greece.

The following parties were suspended by the military junta in April 1967, following the dissolution of the Chamber of Deputies in February:

Centre Union: f. 1961 by G. PAPANDREOU; coalition of Liberals and Progressives together with several smaller groups.

Liberal Democratic Centre Party: f. December 1965 as a breakaway party from the Centre Union by 45 members of the Chamber of Deputies who had supported the Government of Stephanos Stephanopoulos in September 1965.

National Radical Union (Ethniki Rizospastiki Enosis): f. 1956 by Constantine Karamanlis; provided the Government elected February 1956 which lasted until 1963; policy of expanded production and economic stability.

Progressive Party.

Despite the ban on political activity, several clandestine political parties are known to be active in Greece. They include the Communist Party, the Patriotic Front (also Communist), Democratic Defence, and the Pan-Hellenic Liberation Movement.

JUDICIAL SYSTEM

The Courts of Law administering justice in Greece are as follows:

The Supreme Court. This is the supreme court in the State, having also appellate powers. It consists of four sections, three Civil and one Penal, and adjudicates in quorum. President ATHANASIOS GEORGIUO.

Attorney General: PANAYIOTIS THERAPOC.

Courts of Appeal. These are eleven in number. They have jurisdiction in cases of Civil and Penal Law of second degree, and, in exceptional cases, of first degree. President of the Athens Court of Appeal DEM. RETALIS.

Courts of First Instance. There are fifty-eight Courts of First Instance with jurisdiction in cases of first degree, and in exceptional cases, of second degree. They are mixed courts, functioning both as Courts of First Instance and as Penal Courts.

In towns where Courts of First Instance sit there are also Criminal Courts and Juvenile Courts. Commercial Tribunals do not function in Greece, and all commercial cases are tried by ordinary courts of law. There are, however, Tax Courts in some towns.

Courts of the Justice of Peace. There are 360 of these courts throughout the country.

Magistrates' Courts (or simple Police Courts). There are 48.

In all the above courts, except those of the Justice of Peace and the Magistrates' Courts, there are District Attorneys. In Magistrates' Courts the duties of District Attorney are performed by the Public Prosecutor.

The State Council. In addition to the above there is a State Council, with competence over the following cases:

Administrative disputes

Administrative contraventions of law in force.

Revision of Disciplinary procedure on permanent Civil Servants (1952 Constitution, Articles 87-97).

President ALEXANDROS DIMITSAS.

Constitutional Court. This court, set up in 1968 to deal with constitutional matters, will begin to function when the appropriate institutional law takes effect.

RELIGION

THE ORTHODOX CHURCH OF GREECE

The Greek branch of the Holy Eastern Orthodox Church is the officially established religion of the country, adhered to by nearly 97 per cent of the population. The Church uses the Credo of the Ecumenical Synods of Nicene and Constantinople, without the filioque, and administers the seven Holy Sacraments. The Church is administered by a Synod of eleven Metropolitans, under the Presidency of the Archbishop of Athens. The members of the Synod are elected every three years by the Holy Synod of Hierarchy (General Assembly of Prelates), composed of 69 acting Metropolitans of the Church of Greece.

Archbishop of Athens and All Greece: His Beatitude IERONYMOS KOTSONIS.

Within the Greek State there is also the semi-autonomous Church of Crete, composed of seven Metropolitans and the Holy Archbishopric of Crete. The Church is administered by a Synod consisting of the seven Metropolitans under the Presidency of the Archbishop; it is under the spiritual jurisdiction of the Ecumenical Patriarchate of Constantinople, which also maintains certain administrative control.

Archbishop of Crete: The Most Reverend EUGENIUS PSALLIDAKIS (whose See is in Heraklion).

There are also four Metropolitan Sees of Dodecanese, which are spiritually and administratively dependent on the Ecumenical Patriarchate and, finally, the peninsula of Athos, which constitutes the region of the Holy Mountain (Mount Athos) and comprises twenty Monasteries. These are dependent on the Ecumenical Patriarchate of Constantinople, but are autonomous and are safeguarded constitutionally.

OTHER CHURCHES

The Roman Catholic Church: Odos Omirou 9, Athens 135; comprises 7 dioceses: 2 archbishoprics (Naxos-Tinos and Corfu) and 2 bishoprics (Syra, Santorin), 1 Vacariate Apostolic (Salonika) and two exarchates (one for the Byzantine Rite and one for the Armenian Rite). Archbishop of Athens Most Rev. BENEDICTUS PRIN-TESIS. The Roman Catholic Church has 127 churches.

The Catholic Church of the Greek Rite in Greece has one parish at Athens (Odos Acharnon 246) and another at Jannitsa (Macedonia); Exarch Apostolic Msgr. HYACINTHUS GAD, titular Bishop of Gratianopolis, Odos Acharnon 246; the Church, Catholic exarchate of Byzantine rite, has about 3,000 adherents; publ. Katholiki (weekly), the only Catholic paper in Greece (circ. 2,500).

The Greek Evangelical Church (Presbyterian): Bd. Amélie 50, Athens; f. 1886; comprising 30 organized churches; embraces about 1 per thousand of population; member of World Alliance of Reformed Churches; Moderator Rev. STELIOS KALOTERAKIS; publ. Star of the East (monthly).

Muslims (their status is regulated by Law 2345, "On Minorities"); the law provides as religious head of the Muslims a Chief Mufti; the Muslims in Greece possess a number of mosques and schools.

The Jewish Community: the Jewish population of Greece, estimated in 1943 at 75,000 people, was decimated as a result of the German occupation. In 1964 there were about 6,000 Jews in Greece. The Chief Rabbi of Athens is JACOB D. ARAR; temple and offices: 5 Melidoni Street, Athens. The officially recognised representative body for the community is the Central Board of the Jewish Communities of Greece, 46 Pireus str., Athens; f. 1945; Pres. JOSEPH M. LOVINGER.

THE PRESS

At the beginning of 1967, 123 dailies were being published in Greece, no less than 13 being based in Athens and competing for a share in a total circulation of only 700,000. After the coup d'état of April 1967, the number of papers in Athens was halved, total circulation dropped by a third and the remainder of the press was subject to censorship.

The new Constitution of Greece guarantees freedom of expression and of the press. However, the press, according to Article 14, "discharges a public function involving rights and duties and responsibility for the accuracy of its content", so that, although censorship and other preventive measures are prohibited, "seizure after circulation is permitted by order of the public prosecutor" for a variety of reasons (see Constitution, Article 14, above). These include insults to "the Christian and any other known religion" or to the royal family; publications which are "patently rebellious" or aim "at overthrowing the régime", or the existing social system; and publications which "project or diffuse for political exploitation views of outlawed parties or organizations". (Under Articles 19 and 58 political parties or any "union of persons" directed against "the principles of the regime or the social order or the security of the State" are prohibited.)

Article 14 also lays down the procedure to be followed by the public prosecutor in dealing with press offences. For most of these offences a second conviction within five years can result in the temporary or permanent suspension of the offending publication and in suspension from the profession of the offending journalist. For other offences, such as injuring the reputation of a public officer by reference to his "private or family life" when the "public interest" is not involved, suspension of publication can follow after the third offence in ten years.

Two further sections of Article 14 state that the conditions for publication of newspapers "or other political publications", the qualifications and code of conduct of the journalist profession and the rules of operation, including compulsory financial control, of newspaper enterprises "shall be determined by law". These two sections envisage major pieces of legislation being prepared by the Government on the journalistic profession and the running of newspapers. However, such legislation will not presumably be enacted until Article 14, one of the articles of the new Constitution held in abeyance, is brought into operation. In the meantime the present system of censorship, enforced under martial law, remains.

A Press Control Service was established by decree by Colonel Papadopoulos on April 29th, 1967, following the suspension of Article 14 of the Constitution guaranteeing press freedom. Outside Athens and Salonika the functions of censorship were delegated to a local officer and official and were therefore more flexible, so that internal news not carried by the capital's papers has been published in the provinces. From January 25th, 1968, a system of post-publication control of the press has been in use instead of the pre-publication system, and editors have been allowed to determine the lay-out of their papers. Little change was made in the material it was forbidden to publish, and no change in that which it was obligatory to publish.

Eleftheros Kosmos is the leading pro-government organ, and the only paper whose circulation has increased in the period since April 1967. All the newspapers owned by Mrs. Helen Vlachos have closed down, and the formerly pro-Papandreou papers of Mr. Christos Lambrakis (the dailies Vima and Nea and the weeklies Omada, Tachydromos and Economikos Tachydromos) now continue in much altered form.

The draft of the Press Law announced in 1968 was published in August 1969 to come into effect from January 1st, 1970. It required State supervision of the press and the compulsory registration of persons of all grades working for the press. Removal of a name from the official register implied withdrawal of the right to work as a journalist in Greece. Furthermore, newspapers wishing to employ journalists were required to apply to the Ministry of Information for staff who would be selected from the register of approved journalists. Those guilty of "professional misconduct" were to be liable to prosecution, and publications could likewise be seized, confiscated or suspended. Offences included breach of professional secrecy, inaccurate or concealed news, exploitation of news for personal belief, omission to publish "certain information", and "lack of faith and devotion to the country and the national ideals" as well as "attempting to overthrow the existing form of state or social order". Much opposition was expressed by the Greek press, and as a result copies were confiscated of the pro-government Athens daily Vradyni, which is not subject to pre-publication censorship. According to the new Press Law of January 1st, 1970, the Government can now exercise economic control over the press. The traditional privilege of importing newsprint duty-free has been removed and although newspapers with a circulation of under 25,000 are entitled to duty-free newsprint, the number of their pages is Government fixed. Newspapers with a circulation of over 100,000 are required to pay 95% of the duty on the newsprint they consume. A second law coming into effect at the same time abolished all tax exemptions formerly enjoyed by newspapers, meaning that some of the larger papers now pay six to nine times more tax.

In November 1971 a Code of Ethics for Journalists was introduced. The final version contained considerable amendments to the original, which had been strongly opposed by publishers and journalists. The Code lays down rules for journalists for accurate reporting and for adherence to the interests of Greece and its people.

HUNGARY

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

Hungary is a state in Eastern Europe, bounded to the north by Czechoslovakia, to the east by the U.S.S.R. and Romania, to the south by Yugoslavia and to the west by Austria. Its climate is Continental with long, dry summers and severe winters. The language is Hungarian (Magyar). Roman Catholics are the largest single religious denomination with over six and a half million adherents. Other groups are the Hungarian Reformed Church, the Lutheran Church, the Hungarian Orthodox Church and a Jewish community numbering about 80,000. The flag consists of three horizontal stripes of red, white and green. The capital is Budapest.

Recent History

Hungary allied herself with Germany during the Second World War, and having sought to break the alliance in 1944 was occupied by German forces. Liberated in 1945 by Soviet troops, Hungary became a Republic a year later. Land redistribution and nationalization measures followed, despite opposition from the Roman Catholic Church under Cardinal Mindszenty, until in 1949 a People's Republic was declared. Mátyás Rákosi became the leading figure as First Secretary of the Workers' Party. Opposition was subsequently removed by means of purges and political trials. Rákosi became Prime Minister in 1952 but after the death of Stalin a year later lost this post to the more moderate Imre Nagy, and a short period of liberalization followed. Nagy, in turn, was forced to resign in 1955 when Rákosi returned, only to be dismissed a year later by Khrushchev and replaced by another hard-liner, Ernő Gerő. The consequent discontent led to demonstrations in October 1956 which resulted in the return as Prime Minister of Nagy, who promised reforms and in November formed a coalition government. Soviet troops had already entered Hungary, however, and when they had occupied Budapest, a new government was announced under János Kádár, who had taken over as Party leader shortly before. Kádár held the premiership until 1958 and then from 1961 to 1965, and under his leadership government has become less severe and more stable. Economic reforms, in particular those introduced in 1968, have brought a considerable increase in the standard of living and they have been accompanied by modest social and political reforms. The National Assembly elections of 1971 proved to be a cautious experiment in democracy, giving the electorate the opportunity to nominate candidates and thus providing wider representation in the Assembly. The results showed a 98.9 per cent vote in favour of the People's Patriotic Front.

Hungary was admitted to the United Nations in 1955, and is closely aligned with the countries of Eastern Europe through her membership of the Warsaw Pact, whose forces she joined in entering Czechoslovakia in 1968.

Government

The highest organ of state power is Parliament elected every four years by all citizens over 18 years. Parliament elects the Presidential Council consisting of the President, who is the Head of State, two Vice-Presidents and 17 members. The Council exercises power between sessions of Parliament but it is responsible to it. Highest organ of state administration is the Council of Ministers, elected or removed by Parliament at the suggestion of the Presidential Council. The Hungarian Socialist Workers' Party plays an important part in government through its Central and Political Committees.

Under modifications to the electoral law which came into effect for the 1971 elections, the sole right to nominate candidates for the National Assembly is vested in public pre-election nomination meetings open to all voters. Two or more candidates can be nominated for a single seat, provided each receives the backing of at least 30 per cent of those present, and where the seat is contested the successful candidate must gain 50 per cent or more of the votes cast. Any elector is entitled to stand.

Defence

Hungary was a founder member of the Warsaw Pact in 1955 and in 1969 joined the Geneva Disarmament Commission. Military service starts at the age of 18 years and lasts for a maximum of three years. Total regular forces number 103,000, comprising Army 90,000, Air Force 12,500 and Navy 500. There is also an armed force of 27,000 security troops and border guards known as Workers' Guards, and a Workers' Militia of 250,000. Defence expenditure in 1970 totalled 8,900 million forints.

Economic Affairs

In 1968 a new system of economic management was introduced, known as the "new economic mechanism". The official definition of the plan is "to harmonize State planning and market development". Until then the economy had been based on the standard Soviet central planning system, but under the new scheme industry is being decentralized to a certain extent. The aim is to evolve a Socialist market economy in which business enterprises produce what they want, engage in competition on the domestic and foreign markets and share profits among the workers. The reform was introduced during the country's third Five-Year Plan (1966-70) in which all major targets, with the exception of labour productivity, were exceeded. National income in 1970 was 39 per cent higher than in 1965, representing an average annual growth of 7 per cent, and foreign trade turnover went up by more than 50 per cent. Real wages rose by an average of almost 17 per cent, while prices were only 3.5 per cent higher. Targets for the fourth Five-Year Plan (1971-75) highlight the modernization of existing industry and the continued expansion of both national and personal incomes. Specific aims include an increase in the use of natural gas and oil as sources of power and of computers in industry, and plans to make Hungary one of the largest exporters of buses in Europe.

Hungary was formerly a predominantly agricultural country but since the war, industry has come to account for more than half of her total economy. Hungary is an exporter of engineering products, machine tools, buses, telecommunications and electrical equipment, electronic and other instruments. She is still a large exporter of meat, fruit and vegetables and half her exports to Western European countries consists of agricultural produce. Following record crops in 1969 and the export of large amounts of wheat and maize, serious floods brought about a considerable drop in production in 1970. The 1971 harvest showed an 11 per cent increase. Over 97 per cent of the total arable area of the country is collectivized. Vineyards cover 500,000 acres. Chief imports are coal, iron ore, crude oil, coke, cotton, timber and consumer goods.

Hungary is a member of the Council for Mutual Economic Assistance (Comecon) and in July 1969 she submitted a formal application for membership of GATT.

Transport and Communications

The Hungarian State Railways operate 8,759 kilometres of track of which 934 kilometres are electrified. Budapest's first deep-level underground railway started operation on April 4th, 1970, when the first 4½ miles out of a total of 6½ opened. Work on the second section, running under the Danube and linking Pest with Buda, began in 1970 and opens in 1973. There are 29,430 kilometres of roads. Long-distance bus routes cover about 23,936 kilometres. Navigable inland waterways total some 1,688 kilometres. There is a small merchant fleet using mainly Hungarian-built vessels of an average tonnage of 1,100 tons. These operate from the Danube to Mediterranean ports and the United Kingdom. The state airline MALÉV has an extensive network of flights to Europe and the Middle East, but there are no internal flights in Hungary.

Social Welfare

The management, supervision and control of social insurance comes within the jurisdiction of the Central Council of Hungarian Trade Unions, with the National Social Insurance Council acting as an advisory body. Social insurance is available for everyone, and today about 97 per cent of the population is covered. Great efforts have been made since the war to provide all workers with the same insurance scheme; previously there were different schemes for workers and employees which depended on the nature of their work. Social insurance covers sickness benefits which are available from the first day of sickness. Patients are entitled to sick pay for one year, or two years in the case of tuberculosis. All medical consultation and treatment is free, although a charge of 15 per cent of the total price is generally made for medicines and medical appliances. The social insurance scheme also covers maternity benefits—insured women are paid confinement grants for 20–24 weeks—free layettes, child care allowance (a new service which allows a mother to look after her child at home until he is 3 years old), and family allowances which vary according to the number of children in the family.

In Hungary special pension laws determine the right of employed workers, members of agricultural co-operatives, and private tradesmen to pensions. Male workers are entitled to 'old-age pensions' at the age of 60 years (55 for women), if they have been employed for at least ten years. Workers who have been employed in heavy or unhealthy work may qualify for pension five years earlier than this. The employment period for a full pension is 25 years and this pension amounts to 50 per cent of the worker's average wage prior to retirement. Various other pensions are paid under the Hungarian social insurance scheme, these include invalid pensions, widows' pensions, and orphans' allowances. The only contribution made to social service costs by an employee is to the pension fund. This amounts to 3 per cent of wages for the average worker, though the more highly paid worker will contribute more. The employer pays 4 per cent into the pension fund for each person employed. Cost of health services and other social services are met by state subsidies and contributions from the place of work.

Education

The Educational Act of 1961 modernized the Hungarian educational system and provided the basis of the present-day system. Various changes have been made since 1961, including the revision of the basic school system in 1963, and the introduction of a uniform curriculum in the grammar school in 1965. Children under the age of 3 years attend crèches (bölcsődék), and those between the ages of 3 and 6 years attend kindergartens (óvodák). Neither of these schools is compulsory and, although attendance is increasing, they are not so well-attended as elsewhere in Eastern Europe. Compulsory education begins for the Hungarian child at 6 years of age when he attends the basic school (általános iskola). Basic education continues until the child is 14, during which time he will be taught general subjects together with some practical training. Provision is made in the basic school for talented children, particularly those who are linguistically inclined. Facilities for secondary education were improved as a result of the 1961 Educational Act. Children are now required to attend school until the age of 16 years. There are four types of secondary school, excluding special schools for the very gifted or, alternatively the backward or abnormal child. Children who do not wish to continue with their schooling after the age of 16 years attend the továbbképző iskola for two years, in order to complete their compulsory schooling. The majority of children prefer to continue with their education after 16 years of age. The most popular types of secondary schools are the grammar school (gimnázium) and the technikum. The gimnázium provides a four-year course of mainly academic studies, although some vocational training does figure on the curriculum. The technikum offers full vocational training together with a general education, emphasis being laid on practical work. Apprentice training schools (ipari tanulók gyakorlati iskolái), are attached to factories, agricultural co-operatives, etc., and lead to full trade qualifications. General education is less important as part of the curriculum in this type of school.

Over the past few years demand for education in Hungary has been increasing at an exceptional rate and this is reflected in the government's promotion of educational expansion. Both the number of higher educational institutes and the number of students have increased considerably since before the Second World War, and there are now about 80,000 students in 74 higher institutes, including 9 universities and 5 technical universities.

Tourism

Tourism is developing rapidly. Lake Balaton is the main holiday centre for boating, bathing and fishing. The cities have great historical and recreational attractions. Budapest has numerous swimming pools watered by thermal springs. In 1971 there were 6,100,000 foreign visitors.

Nationals of Czechoslovakia, Finland, Poland, Romania, U.S.S.R. and Yugoslavia do not require visas to enter Hungary.

THE CONSTITUTION

(Adopted in August 1949)

NATIONAL STATUS

Hungary is a People's Republic, a State of workers and working peasants, in which all power belongs to the working people and is exercised through elected representatives. The Republic defends the power and liberty of the working people and the independence of the country and opposes the exploitation of man.

SOCIAL STRUCTURE

The bulk of the means of production is owned by the State, by public bodies or by co-operative organizations. Means of production may also be privately owned. The national economy is directed by the State power of the people. The economic life of the Republic is determined by a State national economic plan in which the State strives to expand the forces of production, increase national wealth, raise material and cultural standards and strengthen the defences of the country. All natural resources, means of communication and agricultural enterprises are the property of the State. All foreign and wholesale trade is carried on by the State, and all other trade is under State supervision.

The Republic recognizes and guarantees the right of the working peasants to the land and regards it as its duty to assist the socialist development of agriculture. The State supports every genuine co-operative movement of the workers that is directed against exploitation. The Constitution recognizes and protects all property acquired by labour and guarantees the right of inheritance. Private enterprise is not allowed to run counter to the public interest.

Labour is the base of the social order and every able-bodied citizen has the right and the duty to work to the best of his ability. By their labour, the workers serve the cause of socialist construction.

STATE AUTHORITY

The highest organ of State authority in the Hungarian People's Republic is Parliament which exercises all the rights deriving from the sovereignty of the people and determines the organization, direction and conditions of government. Parliament enacts laws, determines the State budget, decides the national economic plan, elects the Presidential Council and the Council of Ministers, directs the activities of ministries, decides upon declaring war and concluding peace and exercises the prerogative of amnesty.

Parliament is elected for a term of four years and members enjoy immunity from arrest and prosecution without parliamentary consent. It meets at least twice a year and is convened by the Presidential Council or by a written demand of one-third of its members. It elects a speaker, two deputy speakers and six recorders from among its own members, and it lays down its own rules of procedure and agenda. As a general rule, the sessions of Parliament are held in public.

Parliament has the right of legislation which can be initiated by the Presidential Council, the Council of Ministers or any member of Parliament. Decisions are valid only if at least half of the members are present, and they require a simple majority. Constitutional changes require a two-thirds majority. Acts of Parliament are signed by the President and the Secretary of the Presidential Council. Parliament may set up committees.

Parliament may pronounce its dissolution before the expiration of its term, and in the event of an emergency may prolong its mandate or may be re-convened after dissolution. A new Parliament must be elected within three months of dissolution and convened within one month of polling day. At its first sitting Parliament elects from among its members the Presidential Council, consisting of a President, two Vice-Presidents, a Secretary and seventeen members. The Chairman of the Council of Ministers, its Deputy Chairmen and its members are ineligible for election to the Presidential Council.

The Presidential Council may issue the writ for a general election, convene Parliament, initiate legislation, hold plebiscites, direct local government, conclude international treaties, appoint diplomatic representatives, ratify international treaties, appoint higher civil servants and officers of the armed forces, award orders and titles, and exercise the prerogative of mercy. It may annul or modify by-laws, dissolve local organs of government and, when Parliament is not in session, may enact laws. The Presidential Council is responsible to Parliament, which can recall it.

THE HIGHEST ORGAN OF STATE ADMINISTRATION

The highest organ of State administration is the Council of Ministers, responsible to Parliament and consisting of a Chairman, Deputy Chairmen, Ministers of State and other Ministers who are elected by Parliament on the recommendation of the Presidential Council. The Council of Ministers directs the work of the ministries (listed in a special enactment), and ensures the enforcement of laws and the fulfilment of economic plans; it may issue decrees and annul or modify measures taken by any central or local organ of government.

LOCAL ORGANS OF STATE POWER

The local organs of State power are the county, district, town, borough and town precinct councils, whose members are elected for a term of four years by the voters in each area. Local councils direct economic, social and cultural activities in their area, prepare local economic plans and budgets and supervise their fulfilment, enforce laws, supervise subordinate organs, maintain public order, protect public property and individual rights, direct local economic enterprises and support co-operatives. They may issue regulations and annul or modify those of subordinate councils. Local Councils are administered by an Executive Committee elected by and responsible to them.

JUDICATURE

Justice is administered by the Supreme Court of the Hungarian People's Republic, county and district courts. The Supreme Court exercises the right of supervising in principle the judicial activities and practice of all other courts.

All judicial offices are filled by election; Supreme Court judges are elected for a term of five years, county and district court judges for three years; the President and judges of the Supreme Court are elected by Parliament. All court hearings are public unless otherwise prescribed by law, and those accused are guaranteed the right of defence.

PUBLIC PROSECUTOR

The function of the Chief Public Prosecutor is to watch over the observance of the law. He is elected for a period of six years by Parliament, to whom he is responsible. The organization of public prosecution is under the control of the Chief Public Prosecutor, who appoints the public prosecutors.

HUNGARY—(THE CONSTITUTION, THE GOVERNMENT)

RIGHTS AND DUTIES OF CITIZENS

The Hungarian People's Republic guarantees for its citizens the right to work and to remuneration, the right of rest and recreation, the right to protection and assistance in the event of sickness or disability, the right to education, and equality before the law; women enjoy equal rights with men. Discrimination on grounds of sex, religion or nationality is a punishable offence. The State also ensures freedom of conscience, religious worship, speech, the Press and assembly. The right of workers to organize themselves is stressed in order to promote democracy, socialist construction, cultural and educational development and international solidarity. The freedom of the individual, and the privacy of the home and of correspondence are inviolable.

The basic freedoms of all workers are guaranteed and foreign citizens enjoy the right of asylum.

It is the fundamental duty of all citizens to defend the property of the people, consolidate social assets, increase economic strength, raise the living standards and cultural level of the workers, and strengthen the people's democratic system. Military service and the defence of their country are the duties of all citizens.

ELECTORAL SYSTEM

Members of Parliament are elected on the basis of universal, equal and direct suffrage by secret ballot, and they are accountable to their constituents, who may recall them. All citizens of eighteen years and over have the right to vote, with the exception of enemies of the working people, and those who are unsound of mind.

COAT OF ARMS, FLAG AND CAPITAL

The Constitution describes the coat of arms of the Hungarian People's Republic. The flag is red, white and green, and the capital city is Budapest.

NATIONAL ASSEMBLY

The National Assembly consists of a single chamber of 352 members, elected every four years on a territorial basis. The last elections (April 1971) were the first to be held under the new electoral law, and about two and a half million people, more than a third of the total electorate, took part in the meetings at which candidates were nominated. Two or more candidates stood in 49 constituencies.

Speaker of the National Assembly: ANTAL APRÓ.

Deputy Speakers: Dr. MIKLÓS BERESZTÓCZY, Mrs. GÁBOR VARGA.

POLITICAL PARTIES

In Hungary there is no parliamentary opposition. Opposition parties have either been absorbed in the Patriotic People's Front or dissolved.

Magyar Szocialista Munkáspárt (Hungarian Socialist Workers' Party): Budapest V, Széchenyi rkpt. 19; f. November 1956 to replace the Working People's Party (merger of the Communist and Social Democratic Parties). Membership in November 1970 was 662,397; First Sec. of the Central Committee JÁNOS KADÁR; Secs. GYÖRGY ACZÉL, BÉLA BISZKU, ZOLTÁN KOMÓCSIN, REZSŐ NYERS, MIKLÓS ÓVÁRI, ÁRPÁD PULLAI; publ. Népszabadság.

Hazafias Népfront (Patriotic People's Front): f. 1954; socio-political mass movement formed as a successor to the Hungarian Independent People's Front. It is composed of Party and non-Party people, and represents mass organizations such as trade unions, peasants and youth movements. It compiles the lists of candidates, on the basis of nominations from public meetings, for national and local elections. There are over 3,700 local committees; Pres. GYULA KÁLLAI; Sec.-Gen. ISTVÁN BENCSIK; publ. Magyar Nemzet (daily), Szabad Föld (weekly), Képes Újság (weekly), Népfront (monthly).

POLITICAL ORGANIZATIONS

Magyar Kommunista Ifjúsági Szövetség (Communist Youth Union of Hungary): Budapest V, Balassi Bálint u. 16; f. 1957 to replace the Union of Working Youth-DISZ; membership in 1971 was over 800,000; First Sec. of Central Committee Dr. ISTVÁN HORVÁTH; publs. Magyar Ifjúság (weekly), Ifjú Kommunista (monthly).

JUDICIAL SYSTEM

The Hungarian judicial system was established by a law passed in 1954. The administration of justice is the function of the county district courts, the municipal district courts, the county courts, the Municipal Court of Budapest and the Supreme Court. The system of appeal is as follows: appeals against the decisions of county district courts and municipal district courts are considered by the county courts or the Municipal Court of Budapest. Appeals against the decisions of the latter are considered by the Supreme Court. The Chief Public Prosecutor and the President of the Supreme Court have the right to submit to the Supreme Court protest on legal grounds against the final decision of any court.

In the first instance, cases are judged by divisions composed of one regular judge and two lay assessors. In the second instance and at the Supreme Court, only regular judges may preside. The President and the judges of the Supreme Court are elected by Parliament, the other regular judges are appointed by the Minister of Justice. The lay assessors are elected by the local councils.

The Chief Public Prosecutor is responsible for exercising supervision over legality in all fields of the judicial system.

President of the Supreme Court: Dr. ÖDÖN SZAKÁCS.

Minister of Justice: Dr. MIHÁLY KOROM.

Chief Public Prosecutor: Dr. GÉZA SZÉNÁSI.

THE PRESS

The Hungarian Constitution guarantees freedom of the Press and freedom of speech and many aspects of the organization of the Press including provisions of law have been established to secure these ends. Printing works, publishing houses and paper mills have been nationalized. Failures in public administration, economic, cultural and other fields, are commonly criticized in editorials and grievances publicized in letters from members of the public. Since 1963 all official institutions so criticized have been legally obliged to investigate the matter promptly. In addition close relations are maintained between journalists and readers by means of frequent conferences held in factories and farms.

Conversely, considerable legislation is designed to prevent the abuse of Press rights; Article 127 of the penal code penalizes the provoking of hatred of minorities by the Press; incitement and libel are similarly dealt with. Since a decree in 1959 persons and institutions victimized by false Press reports may claim rectification which a government minister is empowered to enforce.

A period of growing liberalization, a reaction to the personality cult which had developed under Rákosi, began around 1954 but was brought to an abrupt end after the crisis of 1956. The following year the Information Office was founded with the functions of granting licences, guiding papers, distributing newsprint and controlling the national news agency, Magyar Távirati Iroda, which monopolizes the reception and distribution of news. The scope of the Press is further curtailed by extensive legal provisions regarding state secrets.

As in many East European countries most papers are the organs of political parties, trade unions, youth and social organizations. A wide range of specialist periodicals are published by societies, factories, scientific institutions, etc. There is no private ownership of publications but since 1957 independent commercial organizations have received publishing licences.

The high circulation of daily papers enables publishing houses to produce high standard specialized periodicals. Moreover, the state gives direct subsidies to certain education, medicine and literature publications, to the religious press and to the four minority language papers. As a result at least six literary periodicals of 132-480 pages each are enabled to appear monthly. Some 80 per cent of newspapers are sold by subscription.

There are 29 dailies with an average total circulation of 2,230,000. This averages sixteen dailies per hundred people which compares with twenty-eight per hundred in Czechoslovakia. Four of the five Budapest dailies sell a total of about 1,155,000 copies and circulate nationally. In order of popularity they are: Népszabadság (810,000), Népszava (290,000), the evening Esti Hírlap (250,000) and Magyar Nemzet (110,000). Népszabadság, the most important daily, central organ of the Socialist Workers' Party and required reading for members, consists of twelve pages (twenty on Sundays) and is read aloud in farm and factory and over the radio. Otherwise the paper most respected for the quality of its news coverage and commentary is Magyar Nemzet.

Weekly newspapers and periodicals number 436. Among the most popular are the illustrated weeklies, among which the satirical Ludas Matyi (450,000), and the women's magazine Nők Lapja (440,000) and the political paper Szabad Föld (370,000). A news magazine giving a high standard of reporting and political discussion is Magyarország. Specialized periodicals include 20 cultural publications, 24 medical journals, 26 scientific papers, 14 agricultural and 13 religious publications. Of this last category Új Ember, Evangelikus Élet and Új Élet for Catholic, Lutheran and Jewish congregations respectively are representative.

PUBLISHERS

The structure of the book trade in Hungary closely resembles that of the U.S.S.R. Books are regarded primarily as vehicles for education, culture and information rather than as commercial goods, and publishers and booksellers are controlled by the state. The Board of Publishers in the Ministry for Culture is the directive organ of publishing and distribution. It controls financial matters and all publishing programmes must gain its approval. The Board expects to show a yearly overall profit but may instruct a publishing house to budget for a loss if the Board considers it socially desirable to publish certain uneconomic works. The Council of Publishers, an adjunct of the Board of Publishers, is an advisory board composed of experts, specialists, and representatives of state and social organs. It offers suggestions in connection with publishing policies and expresses opinions on annual and long-term plans of the publishing houses.

Export and import of books is handled by Kultura Hungarian Company for Books and Newspapers. Three million books a year, both Hungarian and foreign language publications, are exported by Kultura which maintains business relations with eighty countries. Five million books per year are imported, mainly from socialist countries, U.K., U.S.A., France and the German Federal Republic. Kultura also deals in periodicals, exporting about fifteen million copies and importing seven million.

Negotiations for the sale or purchase of translation rights between Hungarian authors and publishers, and foreign publishers are conducted by Artisjus. Payments to foreign authors for translation rights are usually in blocked forints which may be used in a number of ways inside Hungary but not to pay for publishing. Generally payments are subject to 20 per cent tax and 10 per cent agency commission to Artisjus.

REACTOR AND ACCELERATOR

Research Reactor. An experimental reactor at Csillebérc, near Budapest, started in 1959. Supplied by the U.S.S.R., it is of the "VVR-S" type, fuelled by enriched uranium, and cooled and moderated by ordinary water. It is used for research in nuclear physics and biology, and the production of radio isotopes.

Training Reactor. In 1970 Hungarian universities inaugurated a low-power reactor of Hungarian design at the Technical University of Budapest for university and postgraduate training and research.

Accelerators. A 5 MeV electrostatic accelerator, a 200 kev and 180 kev cascade accelerator, in Budapest, and a 2.2 MeV electrostatic accelerator, as well as a 800 kev, 300 kev and 100 kev accelerator, in Debrecen, are in operation.

Co-operation. Agreements have been signed for co-operation in the peaceful uses of atomic energy with Czechoslovakia, German Democratic Republic, India, Poland, Romania, U.S.S.R. and Yugoslavia. Hungary is a member of the International Atomic Energy Agency, Vienna, and of the Joint Institute for Nuclear Research, Dubna, near Moscow.

ICELAND

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

Iceland is a volcanic island situated near the Arctic Circle in the North Atlantic. The island lies 155 miles south-east of Greenland, 645 west of Norway and 500 miles north of Scotland. The climate is cold with average temperatures ranging from 10°C (50°F) in summer to 1°C (34°F) in winter. Icelandic is the official language. The Evangelical Lutheran Church is the established church and embraces 98 per cent of the population. The flag is blue with a red cross bordered with white. The capital is Reykjavík.

Recent History

Iceland became independent in 1944 when the Convention linking it with Denmark under the Danish throne was terminated. Iceland is a founder member of the Nordic Council (1953) and has belonged to both NATO and the Council of Europe since 1949. In 1958, as a conservancy measure, Iceland extended her territorial waters from 3 to 12 miles off-shore. The United Kingdom challenged the decision and British vessels continued to fish inside the new limits under naval protection. In 1960 they withdrew pending the decision of the United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea. The Icelandic Government agreed to a 6-mile limit for British fishing boats until March 1964, since when the 12-mile limit has been imposed.

Iceland was governed by a coalition of the Independence Party and the Social Democratic Party from 1959 to 1971. Following the death of Prime Minister Benediktsson, an interim government was formed in July 1970 by Mr. Jóhann Hafstein. However, there was a swing to the left in the general elections in June 1971 and Ólafur Jóhannesson, the leader of the Progressive Party, formed a coalition government with the People's Union and the Liberal Left Party.

Government

Executive power is vested in the President and the Cabinet consisting of the Prime Minister and other Ministers appointed by the President. The Althing (Parliament) is divided into an Upper and Lower House and is elected by universal suffrage.

Defence

Iceland has no defence forces of her own but is a member of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO). There are units of United States Forces based on the island as part of NATO defence strategy.

Economic Affairs

Fishing and industries based on fish-processing have long been almost the sole foundation for the Icelandic economy. However recently there has been a great effort to achieve a wider and more stable base. Fish products accounted for 95 per cent of the total exports in 1965 but by 1970 this had been reduced to 73 per cent. The nature of the land leaves little room for expansion of the agriculture—only one per cent of the land surface is cultivated and less than a quarter is used for grazing. However 13 per cent of the labour force are engaged in farming, the same proportion as in the fishing industries. The development of aluminium smelting has been most marked and aluminium now accounts for 13.2 per cent of the total exports. Production of diatomite has also been greatly increased. The considerable water power resources have been used to increase the supply of electricity and to enable the development of the manufacturing industries, other than those based on fishing, and these now employ 16 per cent of the labour force.

Icelanders have enjoyed a post-war expansion in income and production which has kept their standard of living above that of many western European countries. However, while wages and prices have risen when the fish catch has been high, they have not fallen in leaner years and the rate of inflation has been one of the highest in the world. In 1967 and 1968 complete failure of the herring catch and a drop in the price of fish caused the gross national product to fall by 11 per cent and the national income to drop by 16 per cent. The Króna was devalued by 24.6 per cent in November 1967 and by a further 35.2 per cent one year later. These measures, and improvements in the fishing industry, have led to a steadily increasing recovery. In 1969 the gross national product rose by 2 per cent and the national income by 3 per cent and in 1970 the figures were 6 per cent and 10.5 per cent respectively.

Although 30 per cent of the total exports go to the U.S.A., Iceland's principle trading partners are the U.K., West Germany and Denmark. Iceland became a member of EFTA in March 1970 but if the U.K., Denmark and Norway join the EEC then she will have to try to negotiate special terms or switch her trade to the U.S.A. and U.S.S.R.

Transport and Communications

There are no railways. Much of the interior is uninhabited and the main roads follow the coast line. Regular motor coach services link the main settlements. Heavy freight is carried by coastal shipping. The development plans provide for new roads and harbour installations. Air transport is particularly important to Iceland and is used, for example, to transport agricultural produce from remote districts. There are regular air services between Reykjavík and outlying townships.

Social Welfare

There is a comprehensive system of social security providing a wide range of insurance benefits including old-age pensions, family allowances, maternity grants, widows' pensions, etc. Contributions to the scheme are compulsory. Pension and health insurance now apply to the whole population. Accident insurance applies to all wage and salary earners and self-employed persons—unless they request exemption—and unemployment insurance to the unions of skilled and unskilled workers and seamen in all towns and villages of over 300 inhabitants, as well as to several unions in villages of less than 300 inhabitants.

ICELAND—(INTRODUCTORY SURVEY, STATISTICAL SURVEY)

Education

Education is compulsory and free for all children between the ages of 7 and 15 years. There is one university and five colleges. In urban regions primary education is available in day schools. In the more remote country districts, where there is no state boarding-school, instruction is provided by the "Travelling Teacher" scheme, whereby the pupil receives education in his own home. Three to four years of ordinary secondary education are then available. A good certificate of education after three years at a middle or general secondary school entitles entry to a High School (Menntaskóli) or a teachers' training college. The matriculation examination at the end of four years at High School provides the qualification for University entrance.

Tourism

Iceland's main attraction for tourists lies in the ruggedness of the interior with its geysers and thermal springs. Mountaineering and pony trekking are increasingly popular as well as skiing and the study of bird life. In 1968 receipts from tourism amounted to $3 million and expenditure to $4 million.

Vísas are not required by nationals of the following countries: Austria, Barbados, Belgium, Brazil, Bulgaria, Canada, Chile, Cyprus, Denmark, Finland, Fiji, France, Gambia, Germany (Federal Republic), Greece, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Korea, Lesotho, Luxembourg, Malaysia, Malawi, Malta, Mauritius, Monaco, Morocco, The Netherlands, Norway, Portugal, Romania, San Marino, Spain, Swaziland, Sweden, Switzerland, Tanzania, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, U.K., U.S.A., Yugoslavia.

Sport

The national sport is wrestling; but football, athletics and winter sports are universally popular. All children must, by law, learn to swim.

Public Holidays

1972: March 30 (Maundy Thursday), March 31 (Good Friday), April 1 (Easter Saturday), April 3 (Easter Monday), April 20 (1st day of Summer), May 1 (Labour Day), May 11 (Ascension Day), May 22 (Whit Monday), June 17 (National Day), August 7 (Bank Holiday), December 24, 25 and 26 (Christmas), December 31 (New Year's Eve).

1973: January 1 (New Year's Day).

Weights and Measures

The Metric System is in force.

Currency and Exchange Rates

The principal unit of currency is the Króna (kr), which is divided into 100 Aurar.

Notes: Krónur 1,000, 500, 100, 50, 25, 10, 5, 2, 1.

Coins: Krónur 2, 1; Aurar 25, 10, 5, 2, 1.

Exchange rate: 222.50 kr. = £1 sterling

87.25 kr. = $1 U.S.

THE CONSTITUTION

From the year 930, when the Icelandic Free State was founded, settlement beginning in 874, until 1264 the land was an Independent Republic. In that year it lost its independence, falling under Norwegian rule and then in 1380, with Norway, under Danish rule. When in 1814 Norway came under Sweden, Iceland remained with Denmark, and this continued until 1918, when its sovereign status was recognised. Certain subjects were reserved for joint consideration. The Order of Succession of the Crown was the most important. There was a Joint Committee which reviewed important legislation of both States and promoted bills aiming at co-operation. Citizens of both States enjoyed equal rights in the other, but were exempt from military service in the other. The union with Denmark was dissolved and a new Republican Constitution established on June 17th, 1944.

THE GOVERNMENT

The President is elected for four years by universal suffrage. All those qualified to vote who have reached the age of 35 are eligible for the Presidency.

The Legislative power is jointly vested in the Althing and the President. The Executive power is exercised by the President and other governmental authorities in accordance with the constitution and other laws of the land.

The President summons the Althing every year and determines when the session shall close. He may adjourn meetings of the Althing but not for more than two weeks nor more than once a year. He appoints the Ministers and presides over the State Council. He may be dismissed only if a resolution supported by three-quarters of the Althing is approved by a plebiscite.

The President may dissolve the Althing. Elections must be held within two months and the Althing must reassemble within eight months.

The Althing is composed of 60 members, 49 of whom are elected by 8 proportionately represented constituencies for a period of four years, while 11 supplementary seats are allotted to the parties for equalization, intended to achieve as near a really proportional representation with regard to the total of votes gained by each party as possible, without raising the total number of members above 60. Substitute members are elected at the same time and in the same manner as Althing members. The Althing is divided into two houses, the efri deild, or Upper House, and the neðri deild, or Lower House; but sometimes both Houses work together as a United Althing. The Upper House consists of a third of the members whom the United Althing chooses from amongst the representatives, the remaining two-thirds forming the Lower House. Each House and the United Althing elects its own Speaker. The voting age, both for local administrative bodies and for the Althing, is twenty and all citizens domiciled in Iceland may vote, provided they are of unblemished character and financially responsible.

The budget must be introduced in the United Althing but other bills may be introduced into either House. They must, however, be given three readings in each house and be approved by two-thirds of the votes cast before they are submitted to the President. If he disapproves a bill it nevertheless becomes valid but must be submitted to a plebiscite. Ministers may speak in either House, but may vote only in that of which they are members. The Ministers are responsible to the Althing and may be impeached by that body, in which case they are tried by the Court of Impeachment.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT

For purposes of Local Government the country is divided into Provinces, Districts and Municipalities. The 8 Urban Municipalities are governed by Town Councils, which possess considerable autonomy. The Districts also have Councils and are further grouped together to form the Provinces, over each of which a centrally appointed Chief Official presides. The franchise for municipal purposes is universal above 20 years, conducted on a basis of proportional representation.

REPUBLIC OF IRELAND

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Republic of Ireland is an independent state comprising 26 of the 32 counties making up the island. The remaining six counties in the north come under the jurisdiction of the Governments of the United Kingdom and of Northern Ireland. Ireland lies in the Atlantic, 50-100 miles west of Great Britain. The climate is mild and equable. Irish is the official first language, but English is universally spoken. Official documents are printed in English and Irish. Ninety-five per cent of the population are Roman Catholic and 5 per cent Protestant. The flag consists of three vertical bands of green, white and orange. The capital is Dublin.

Recent History

The Republic remained neutral during the Second World War and has since joined no military alliances. The country has contributed to international affairs in many ways. It is a very active member of the United Nations and has sent military contingents to the Congo and to Cyprus as part of UN peace-keeping activities. Irish officers have also served with various UN missions.

In the Presidential election of June 1966, President Éamon de Valéra was re-elected. John Lynch became Prime Minister in November 1966 and he was re-elected to that office following the general election of June 1969. In a referendum held in October 1968 the Government's proposal to change from proportional to direct election of Representatives was defeated.

During 1970 allegations of gun-running attempts led to the dismissal of three Cabinet Ministers and the resignation of a fourth. All were cleared, but did not return to the Cabinet. In November Mr. Lynch received a vote of confidence in his government in the Dáil. Although opposed to the British Army's presence in Northern Ireland, Mr. Lynch has pledged his government to finding a peaceful solution there and has discussed the situation with the British government without insisting on the prior abolition of internment. In November 1971 he survived an opposition motion of censure over this policy. Serious measures have been taken against the illegal Irish Republican Army, which uses the Republic as a base for terrorist activities in Ulster.

Negotiations for the Republic's entry to the European Economic Community began in 1970; the Treaty of Accession was signed in January 1972 and Ireland will become a full member on January 1st, 1973, subject to the result of a national referendum.

Government

The President is elected by direct adult universal suffrage for a seven-year term. As Head of State he summons or dissolves Parliament which consists of the House of Representatives and the Senate. The House of Representatives is elected by universal adult suffrage for a five-year term on the basis of proportional representation. Of the 60 members of the Senate, 49 are elected and 11 nominated by the Prime Minister. Executive functions are exercised by the Government which is responsible to Parliament.

Defence

Establishments provide for a Permanent Defence Force of approximately 13,000 all ranks including the Air Corps and the Naval Service, though at present forces are kept at approximately 60 per cent. In addition, the Defence Estimates for the year ending March 31st, 1972, provide for a Reserve Defence Force of approximately 23,700 all ranks and envisages total expenditure during this period of £19,165,000. Recruitment is on a voluntary basis. Since November 1971, the 335 mile-long border between the Republic and Northern Ireland has been patrolled with increasing care, and this has involved re-calling part of the Irish army's contingent in Cyprus, where, since 1964, it has formed part of the UN Force.

Economic Affairs

While the economy is based on agriculture, the decade from 1960 to 1970 was marked by a major industrial expansion. The principle industrial groups are food, drink and tobacco and metals and engineering. In the 1970s the Industrial Development Authority is promoting a shift of emphasis to more capital intensive industries with a high technological content and encouraging small industries through grants, a research centre and managerial and technical advice. Grants to agriculture continue to take up 20 per cent of the annual budget and Government policy is now to encourage new farming methods and changes to more profitable produce. Related education facilities are being provided. Economic growth dropped in 1970 to 2½ per cent, but rose in 1971 to 4 per cent, the average rate since the First Programme for Economic Expansion in 1958. A Fourth Development Plan from April 1972 involves expenditure of £40 million.

The main exports are processed food, live animals and machinery. The United Kingdom is the principal foreign customer, and free trade between Ireland and the United Kingdom in all commodities, except certain agricultural goods, was established in July 1966, with the immediate ending of British import duties and the gradual abolition of Irish duties by 1973. In 1970, Britain took 66 per cent of the total Irish exports and provided Ireland with 53 per cent of her imports. The Republic urgently needs new outlets and is increasing exports to EEC countries.

Transport and Communications

There are 1,932 miles of railways operated by the State with 212 diesel locomotives, which make this the first fully dieselized rail system in Europe. Roads extend for 53,859 miles, 9,889 miles of which are main roads. Chief sea ports are Dublin and Dun Laoghaire, Cork, Waterford, Rosslare, Limerick, Foynes and Whiddy Island. Domestic and European air services use Dublin airport and there is an international airport on the trans-atlantic route at Shannon. Air transport is provided by the Irish airline Aer Lingus.

Social Welfare

Social Welfare benefits in Ireland fall into two general categories: (1) those received under compulsory insurance schemes by contributors and their dependants and (2) those received on a non-contributory basis by people of inadequate means. Childrens' allowances are also paid to all households for each child without regard to family means.

Social Welfare Insurance is compulsory for non-manual workers whose annual earnings are not more than £1,600, and for all manual workers. Persons who cease to be compulsorily insured may be allowed to continue their title to pensions, on a voluntary basis. The social insurance scheme provides for widows', retirement and old age pensions, unemployment, disability and invalidity benefits and death grants. The cost is shared by the employer, the employee and the State. An occupational injuries benefit scheme is also in operation.

People of inadequate means who are not entitled to benefit under these contributory schemes may receive non-contributory pensions or other benefits from the State or other public funds. These benefits include widows' pensions, deserted wives' allowances, old age and blind pensions, home assistance and unemployment assistance.

The Health Service in Ireland operates according to income: all services are available free to lower income groups while upper income groups generally pay for their health services.

Education

Education in Ireland is compulsory from the age of 6 to 14. Most children attend a National School of their own religious denomination, although religious instruction is optional. The State entrusts the local management of primary schools as much as possible to the various religious denominations, but meets most of the cost, and maintains a large measure of control by prescribing the programme and subjecting the schools to regular inspection. Irish history, music and traditions are emphasized and the Irish language used as far as possible. There are a few private primary schools in urban areas.

Post-primary education takes place in three sorts of schools: Secondary Schools are private institutions run by boards of governors or religious communities. However, the Department of Education pays a grant in respect of each eligible pupil, and in effect all but a very small proportion of secondary schools offer free education. £400 of a teacher's salary is paid by his school authority and the balance by the Department. The programme is prescribed by the Department of Education and courses last five or six years starting at the age of 12. Pupils take the Intermediate Certificate at 15 or 16 after a balanced, general curriculum and then specialize in five recognized subjects in which they sit the Leaving Certificate at 17 or 18. Vocational Schools provide primary school leavers with a general and practical training for employment, as well as providing more specialized courses in technical training. In each county these schools come under the management of a Vocational Education Committee elected by the local authority. Two-thirds of the cost is borne by the Department of Education and the balance by the local authority. Where inadequate post-primary education facilities existed a number of comprehensive schools have been instituted, which take all pupils from within approximately a ten mile radius. The three-year curriculum includes a variety of compulsory and optional subjects, both academic and practical, and may lead to the Intermediate Certificate. After this some pupils continue at a technical school, which may be part of the same school or a separate college.

Regional technical colleges have been established in six provincial centres: Athlone, Carlow, Dundalk, Leterkenny, Sligo and Waterford. A seventh is expected to open in Galway in September 1972. The colleges provide senior, post-primary apprenticeship, technical, professional and other courses.

The gaining of certain prescribed successes in the Leaving Certificate examination qualifies for entrance to the two universities, which are both self governing, though they receive annual state grants. The National University of Ireland is made up of University College Dublin, University College Cork and University College Galway. St. Patrick's, Maynooth, is also a recognized College of the University. The University of Dublin consists of Trinity College Dublin.

The Department of Education provides university and other higher-education grants to students.

The total education budget is at present over £83 million. In addition the Government has been granted a loan from 1971 by the World Bank of $13 million, with which to carry out its new policy of placing more emphasis on vocational and technical education as well as consolidating general education. The loan will help finance a $33 million project for 24 new comprehensive schools, 30 agricultural colleges and 3 technical colleges.

Tourism

Tourism continues to be Ireland's second industry. In 1970 tourist expenditure amounted to over £77 million. There were approximately 1.25 million visitors, three fifths of whom were from the U.K. The country has numerous beauty spots, notably the Killarney Lakes and the West Coast.

Nationals of the following countries do not require a visa: Argentina, Austria, Belgium, Bolivia, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Denmark, Ecuador, El Salvador, Finland, France, German Federal Republic, Greece, Guatemala, Honduras, Iceland, Italy, Japan, Liechtenstein, Luxembourg, Mexico, Monaco, Morocco, Netherlands, Nicaragua, Norway, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Portugal, South Africa, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, Tunisia, Turkey, U.K. (including Commonwealth countries), U.S.A., Uruguay, Venezuela.

Sport

Gaelic football and hurling (a form of hockey) are the most popular sports.

Public Holidays

1972: March 31 (Good Friday), April 3 (Easter Monday), June 5 (fixed holiday to replace Whit Monday), August 7 (August Bank Holiday), December 25 (Christmas Day), December 26 (Boxing Day).

1973: March 17 (St. Patrick's Day).

Weights and Measures

The Imperial System of weights and measures is in force.

THE CONSTITUTION

THE original Constitution of the Irish Free State came into operation on December 6th, 1922. Certain provisions which were regarded as contrary to national sentiments were gradually removed by successive amendments, with the result that by 1937 the text differed considerably from that of the original document. It was superseded by an entirely new Constitution, which was approved by Parliament (Dáil Éireann) on June 14th, 1937, and enacted by the people by means of a plebiscite on July 1st. This new Constitution came into operation on December 29th, 1937.

TITLE OF THE STATE

The title of the State is Éire or, in the English language, Ireland.

NATIONAL STATUS

The Constitution declares that Ireland is a sovereign, independent, democratic State. It affirms the inalienable, indefeasible and sovereign right of the Irish nation to choose its own form of government, to determine its relations with other nations, and to develop its life, political, economic and cultural, in accordance with its own genius and traditions.

The Constitution applies to the whole of Ireland, but, pending the re-integration of the national territory, the laws enacted by the Parliament established by the Constitution have the same area and extent of application as those of the Irish Free State.

THE PRESIDENT

At the head of the State is the President, elected by direct suffrage, who holds office for a period of seven years. He, on the advice of the Government or its head, summons and dissolves Parliament, signs and promulgates laws and appoints judges, and, on the nomination of Dáil Éireann, appoints the Taoiseach (Prime Minister) and, on the nomination of the Taoiseach and with the previous approval of Dáil Éireann, the other members of the Government. The supreme command of the Defence Forces is vested in him, its exercise being regulated by law.

In addition, the President has power to refer certain Bills to the Supreme Court for decision on the question of their constitutionality; and also, at the instance of a prescribed proportion of the members of both Houses of the Oireachtas, to refer certain Bills to the people for decision at a Referendum.

The President, in the exercise and performance of certain of his Constitutional powers and functions, has the aid and advice of a Council of State.

PARLIAMENT

The Oireachtas or National Parliament consists of the President and two Houses, viz. a House of Representatives, called Dáil Éireann, and a Senate, called Seanad Éireann. The Dáil consists of 144 members, who are elected for a five-year term by adult suffrage on the system of proportional representation by means of the single, transferable vote. Of the sixty members of the Senate, eleven are nominated by the Taoiseach (Prime Minister), six are elected by the universities, and forty-three are elected from five panels of candidates established on a vocational basis, representing: (1) National Language and Culture, Literature, Art, Education, and such professional interests as may be defined by law for the purpose of this panel; (2) Agriculture and allied interests, and Fisheries; (3) Labour, whether organized or unorganized; (4) Industry and Commerce, including banking, finance, accountancy, engineering and architecture; (5) Public Administration and social services, including voluntary social activities.

POWERS OF THE SENATE

A maximum period of ninety days is afforded to the Senate for the consideration or amendment of Bills sent to that House by the Dáil, but the Senate has no power to veto legislation.

EXECUTIVE POWER

The Executive Power of the State is exercised by the Government, which is responsible to Dáil Éireann and consists of not less than seven and not more than fifteen members. The head of the Government is the Taoiseach (Prime Minister).

FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS

The State recognizes the family as the natural, primary and fundamental unit group of Society, possessing inalienable and imprescriptible rights antecedent and superior to all positive law. It acknowledges the right and duty of parents to provide for the education of their children, and, with due regard to that right, undertakes to provide free education. It pledges itself also to guard with special care the institution of marriage.

The Constitution contains special provision for the recognition and protection of the fundamental rights of citizens, such as personal liberty, free expression of opinion, peaceable assembly, and the formation of associations and unions.

Freedom of conscience and the free practice and profession of religion are, subject to public order and morality, guaranteed to every citizen. No religion may be endowed or subjected to discriminatory disability. The special position of the Catholic Church as the guardian of the faith professed by the majority of the citizens is recognised by the State. The other religious denominations existing in the country at the date of the coming into operation of the Constitutions are also recognised.

DIRECTIVE PRINCIPLES OF SOCIAL POLICY

Certain principles of social policy intended for the general guidance of the Oireachtas, but not cognisable by the courts, are set forth in the Constitution. Among their objects are the direction of the policy of the State towards securing the distribution of property so as to subserve the common good, the regulation of credit so as to serve the welfare of the people as a whole, the establishment of families in economic security on the land, and the right to an adequate means of livelihood for all citizens.

The State pledges itself to safeguard the interests, and to contribute where necessary to the support, of the infirm, the widow, the orphan and the aged, and shall endeavour to ensure that citizens shall not be forced by economic necessity to enter occupations unsuited to their sex, age or strength.

AMENDMENT OF THE CONSTITUTION

No amendment to the Constitution can be effected except by the decision of the people given at a Referendum.

POLITICAL PARTIES

Fianna Fáil (The Republican Party): was formed in 1926 and provided the Government of Ireland from 1932 to 1948, from 1951 to 1954, and 1957 to date, with ÉAMON DE VALÉRA, President of the organization, as Taoiseach (Prime Minister) until his election as President of Ireland in June 1959, when he was succeeded in both posts by SEÁN F. LEMASS. JOHN LYNCH, T.D., became Taoiseach and President of Fianna Fáil on the resignation of SEÁN LEMASS in November 1966. It has 2,000 branches and 72 members in the Dáil. Gen. Sec. Senator THOMAS MULLINS. Offices: 13 Upper Mount Street, Dublin.

Fine Gael (United Ireland Party): Formed in September 1933 by the amalgamation of Cumann na nGaedheal (the Cosgrave Party), the Centre Party (formerly the Farmers' Party), and the National Guard (formerly the Army Comrades Association). It has 51 members in the Dáil. Leader LIAM COSGRAVE, T.D.; Gen. Sec. Comdt. J. W. SANFEY; Hon. Secs. GERRY L'ESTRANGE, T.D., PATRICK J. LINDSAY, S.C. Offices: 16 Hume St., Dublin 2.

The Labour Party originated with the addition of political functions to the Trade Union Congress in 1912. At the end of 1930 it was decided to separate the political and industrial functions of the Party, and the Trade Union Congress and the Labour Party became separate bodies. Chair. of the Party R. J. CONNOLLY; Vice-Chair. NIAL GREENE; Leader of Parliamentary Labour Party BRENDAN CORISH, T.D.; Gen. Sec. BRENDAN HALLIGAN. Offices: 20 Earlsfort Terrace, Dublin; Publ. Labour News (Monthly).

Sinn Féin (Ourselves Alone): 30 Gardiner Place, Dublin; f. 1905; aims: to end British occupation of Irish Territory, to end partition rule in Ireland and to establish a Democratic Socialist Republic of all Ireland. Since January 1970 split from the Northern Ireland party, on adopting a Marxist programme. Pres. TOMAS MAC GÍOLLA Publ. United Irishman: circ. 58,000.

Aontacht Éireann (Republican Unity Party): 53 Adelaide Rd., Dublin 2; f. 1971; has one member in the Dáil; Leader KEVIN BOLAND.

JUDICIAL SYSTEM

Justice is administered in public by Judges appointed by the President on the advice of the Government. The Judges of all Courts are completely independent in the exercise of their functions. The jurisdiction and organization of the Courts are dealt with in the Courts (Establishment and Constitution) Act, 1961, and the Courts (Supplemental Provisions) Acts, 1961 to 1968.

THE SUPREME COURT

The Supreme Court, consisting of the Chief Justice and four other Judges, has appellate jurisdiction from all decisions of the High Court. The President of Ireland may, before signing any Bill, refer it to the Supreme Court, to decide whether it is constitutional.

IRELAND—(JUDICIAL SYSTEM, RELIGION)

THE COURT OF CRIMINAL APPEAL

The Court of Criminal Appeal, consisting of the Chief Justice or an ordinary Judge of the Supreme Court and two Judges of the High Court, deals with appeals by persons convicted on indictment, where leave to appeal has been granted. The decision of this Court is final unless the Court or the Attorney-General certifies that a point of law involved should, in the public interest, be taken to the Supreme Court.

THE HIGH COURT

The High Court, consisting of the President of the High Court and six other Judges, has full original jurisdiction in, and power to determine, all matters and questions whether of law or fact, civil or criminal. The High Court on circuit acts as an appeal court from the Circuit Court. The Central Criminal Court sits as directed by the President of the High Court to try criminal cases outside the jurisdiction of the Circuit Court. The duty of acting as the Central Criminal Court is assigned, for the time being, to a Judge of the High Court.

CIRCUIT AND DISTRICT COURTS

The civil jurisdiction of the Circuit Court is limited to £600 in contract and tort, £1,000 in actions founded on hire-purchase and credit-sale agreements, £2,000 in equity, and £5,000 in probate and administration, but where the parties consent the jurisdiction is unlimited. In criminal matters the Court has jurisdiction in all cases except murder, treason, piracy and allied offences. A Circuit Judge is assigned to each circuit and two to the Dublin circuit. The Circuit Court acts as an appeal court from the District Court, which has a summary jurisdiction in a large number of criminal cases where the offence is not of a serious nature. In civil matters the District Court has jurisdiction in contract and tort (except slander, libel, criminal conversation, seduction, slander of title, malicious prosecution and false imprisonment) where the claim does not exceed £50. In actions founded on hire-purchase and credit-sale agreements the jurisdiction extends to £100.

All criminal cases except those dealt with summarily by a Justice in the District Court are tried by a Judge and a Jury of twelve. Juries are also used in very many civil cases. In a criminal case the jury must be unanimous in reaching a verdict but in a civil case the agreement of nine members is sufficient.

Legislation is in train to increase the civil jurisdiction of the District Court and the Circuit Court and to abolish the use of judges in civil cases in the Circuit Court.

RELIGION

The religious professions of the population are approximately as follows: Roman Catholics 2,700,000; the Church of Ireland (Anglicans) 100,000; Presbyterians 20,000; Methodists 8,000; all others 10,000.

The organization of the churches takes no account of the partition of Ireland into two separate political entities. Thus the Catholic Primate of All-Ireland and the Protestant Episcopalian Primate of All-Ireland now have their seat in Northern Ireland at Armagh, and the headquarters of the Presbyterian Church in Ireland is at Belfast.

THE PRESS

The Constitution of Ireland provides for the recognition and protection of the fundamental rights of the citizens including free expression of opinion. However, the powerful position of the Roman Catholic Church in Ireland tends to moderate editorial policy and discourages discussion on certain controversial issues such as birth control. The right of a journalist's professional secrecy is not recognized by the Irish courts.

The Irish newspapers, with the exception of the Times of Dublin, contain little foreign news when compared with those of other countries, and little news of crime and none of crimes of violence. Instead they tend to concentrate on sport, business and finance, society and news of interest to women, literature and education, religion, Irish history and antiquities. Discontent with Irish newspapers is seen in the large number of subscriptions to British newspapers sold in Ireland.

Ireland has three daily newspapers, the Irish Times, the Irish Independent and the Irish Press. The Irish Independent and the Irish Press are distributed nationally and each have evening editions, the Evening Herald and the Evening Press. The Irish Times is liberal in tone, attracting young readers who have increased its circulation by over 8,000 since 1966.

ITALY

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Republic of Italy is a peninsula extending from southern Europe into the Mediterranean Sea. The peninsula is about 730 miles long and 150 miles at its widest point. The two principal islands are Sicily to the south-west and Sardinia to the west. The Alps form a natural boundary to the north where the bordering countries are France to the north-west, Switzerland and Austria to the north and Yugoslavia to the north-east. The climate is Mediterranean. The language is Italian. German is spoken in the Alto Adige region on the Austrian border, and in the Basilicata region of eastern Italy there is an Albanian-speaking minority. Roman Catholicism is the state religion. The flag has three vertical bands of green, white and red. The capital is Rome.

Recent History

In 1946, as the result of a plebiscite, the Monarchy was abolished and a Republic officially declared in 1948. In 1952 Italy joined the European Coal and Steel Community and in 1958 was one of the founder-members of the European Economic Community (the Common Market). Since the war the Christian Democratic Party has dominated government coalitions but in the General Election of April, 1963, it lost ground to the Right and to the Communists. Since then there has been a rapid succession of mainly coalition governments, still dominated by the Christian Democrats. In July 1970 Emilio Colombo succeeded in reviving a Centre-Left coalition which had previously been dissolved in 1968. This government passed two controversial measures—the Divorce Bill and the Finance Bill—but failed to produce confidence in adverse economic conditions, and resigned in January 1972 after the Republicans had left the coalition. In February 1972 Giulio Andreotti formed a Christian Democratic government which was immediately defeated. Parliament was dissolved, and general elections will be held in May 1972. A new President, Giovanni Leone (Christian Democrat) was elected in December 1971 after twenty-three ballots.

Throughout 1968 students organized strikes and demonstrations in favour of university reform, and nationwide strikes by workers in November and December supported demands for higher pensions and the abolition of zonal wage differentials.

Strikes and labour unrest have continued since 1968, mainly in support of social reforms. Violence instigated by the extreme Right and Left continued in 1970 and 1971, notably in Milan and in Reggio di Calabria, where riots were sparked off by a decision to make another town, Catanzaro, the regional capital of Calabria.

The labour unrest of Autumn 1969 brought to light the increased strength of the trade union movement at a time when the influence of political parties was waning. The large labour confederations have become less politicised and increasingly concerned with social issues.

In December 1970 a Bill legalizing divorce became law; since the Vatican subsequently urged a referendum on divorce it has become a politically divisive issue. After a Constitutional Court ruling a referendum will be held in 1973.

The dispute between Italy and Austria over the Alto Adige (South Tyrol) region was settled by a new statute of October 1971, giving the region a special degree of autonomy.

Government

Parliament consists of the Chamber of Deputies and the Senate. Both jointly exercise legislative functions. Deputies serve a five-year term and are elected by direct adult suffrage. Senators are elected for a six-year term on a regional basis. The President of the Republic, who is the Head of the State, is elected jointly by the Chamber of Deputies and the Senate for a period of seven years. The President nominates the Council of Ministers which forms the executive.

In five regions of Italy (Sicily, Sardinia, Trentin-Alto-Adige, Friuli-Venezia Giulia and Val d'Aosta) there is a large degree of regional autonomy. Each region has a Regional council and a Giunta regionale which holds executive power. The fifteen remaining regions have Regional Councils, first elected in 1970, and due to take effect from 1972.

Defence

Italy, a NATO member, maintains an Army of 375,000 (including Carabinieri), a Navy of 45,000 and 9n Air Force of 74,000. Military service lasts 15 months in the Army and Air Force and two years in the Navy. The 1971 defence budget totalled 1,657,000 million lire (including Carabinieri).

Economic Affairs

Although agriculture in the past represented an important part of the Italian economy, a substantial advance has taken place since the end of the war in the proportion of the gross national product contributed by the industrial sector, particularly engineering and other manufacturing industries. State-owned industries account for approximately half the total national industrial investment. A Five-Year Plan, 1966-70, envisaged an annual growth rate of 5 per cent in real terms. In 1969 the growth rate of GNP at factor cost reached 4.7 per cent.

The industrialized northern part of the country employs thousands of Italians from the less developed regions south of Rome. These regions, including Sicily, are being strenuously developed by the Cassa per il Mezzogiorno (the state fund to develop Southern Italy).

Tourism and agriculture still have considerable importance. Net income from tourism in 1968 was about 1,112 million dollars. The proportion of the gross national product at market prices contributed by the agricultural sector was 9.8 per cent (11.1 per cent at factor cost). The chief crops are wheat, rice, maize, grapes and olives and much wine is produced. The second Piano Verde, a five-year plan to streamline the country's agricultural sector, was approved in 1966; 893,250 million lire were allocated for this purpose.

ITALY—(INTRODUCTORY SURVEY)

Many Italians work abroad and their remittances form a valuable source of income; in 1968 they totalled 741 million dollars.

As a reflection of the political and social instability in 1969 and the first half of 1970, Italy was faced with severe inflation and stagnation; initial confidence in the stability of the Colombo government did not halt this. Wage increases in 1969 totalling approximately 20 per cent were not offset by improved productivity, and as a result more than a million Italians were unemployed in autumn 1971, while forecasts of growth in the economy became open to question. Many of Italy's largest industrial firms were seriously affected by increased labour costs and by industrial action. The government's measures to increase industrial activity included renewed public investment in building, improved credit facilities and tax relief for expansion. The 10 per cent American import surcharge of September 1971 was expected to affect Italy's textile and footwear industries severely.

Italy's long-term economic problem remains that of the integration of Southern Italy with the more industrially-developed North. The income per capita of the Southern population is just over half that of the country as a whole, while employment and production lag far behind, despite the efforts of the Cassa per il Mezzogiorno.

Transport and Communications

There are 16,218 km. of railways, nearly half of them electrified. Italy has an advanced system of motorways, which are being extended. The most important completed undertaking is the Autostrada del Sole (the Sun Highway) between Milan and Salerno. The Mont Blanc Tunnel, opened in 1965, shortens the road journey from Paris to Rome by 130 miles. The Great St. Bernard Tunnel linking Italy with Switzerland was opened in March 1964. By 1975, a complete network of motorways, 6,146 km., will cover Italy; in 1970, 3,496 km. were open. Alitalia, the Italian airline, operates internally and throughout the world and there are four other airlines with scheduled services. The merchant fleet has a gross tonnage of about 7 million tons and is the world's eighth largest.

Social Welfare

The Istituto Nazionale della Previdenza Sociale (INPS) administers the following benefits to employees in the private sector and to farmers and craftsmen: Old Age Pensions, paid to employees who have been insured for at least 15 years. The minimum monthly amount is 23,500 lire. More than 3 million people draw old age pensions; Unemployment: workers who are unemployed because of slack periods and who have paid compulsory contributions for at least one year, receive for a maximum period of six months daily compensation amounting to 300 lire per day plus 120 lire for each dependent. The INPS also administers Disability Benefits and an insurance scheme against tuberculosis for workers and families. These benefits are financed by contributions from workers and employers, who pay half each, and by a state subsidy.

INPS administers Family Allowances which are paid to all employed persons for wife, children and any other dependants. These allowances, which are paid to about 7 million workers and vary in amount according to type of employment, are paid by the employer, who then recuperates the amount on the contributions which he pays to the INPS.

Medical Insurance for most employed persons in the private sector and for certain self-employed persons is administered by the Istituto Nazionale per l'Assicurazione contro le Malattie (INAM). Payment for medical treatment and prescriptions is normally made directly by the patient who then obtains total or partial reimbursement. Industrial Injuries Benefits are paid by the Istituto Nazionale per l'Assicurazione contro gli Infortuni sul Lavoro (INAIL). The Opera Nazionale per la Protezione della Maternità e dell'Infanzia (ONMI) provides every child from birth to six years with free welfare and medical care at special clinics.

State employees and their families contribute to a compulsory insurance scheme covering medical treatment, prescriptions and maternity benefits as well as loans and scholarships, administered by the Ente Nazionale di Previdenza ed Assistenza per i Dipendenti dello Stato (ENPAS). About 2 million employees are insured under the scheme. The Ente Nazionale di Previdenza per i Dipendenti da Enti di Diritto Pubblico (ENPDEP) administers a similar scheme for employees of public bodies, such as the Institute for Industrial Reconstruction.

The foundations of a national health service were laid in a Finance Bill in December 1970, covering the next five years.

Education

Education is compulsory and free between the ages of 6 and 14. Books, equipment and meals are provided for a large number of needy pupils. There is a shortage of classrooms and many schools operate on double shifts. The curricula of all Italian schools are standardized by the Ministry of Education. There are 19,508 private and state nursery schools (scuole materne) with places for nearly 1,400,000 children. After primary school, which is from 6 to 11 years, the pupil enters the lower secondary school (scuola media unificata) where the compulsory subjects are: Italian, History, Religion, Civics, Geography, Mathematics, Natural Science, Art, P.T. and a foreign language. Music and handwork are compulsory only in the first year. Latin, which is optional, is first taught in the third year. An examination at the end of three years leads to a lower secondary school certificate, which gives access to all higher secondary schools. Pupils wishing to enter a classical lycée (liceo classico) must also pass in Latin.

Higher secondary education is provided by Classical, Artistic and Scientific Lycées, Training Schools for Elementary Teachers and Technical and Vocational Institutes (industrial, commercial, nautical, etc.). After five years at a lycée the student sits an examination for the higher secondary school certificate (maturità) which qualifies him for automatic entry into any university faculty, except the Faculty of Humanities, which requires the maturità classica from the Classical Lycée. Special four-year courses are provided at the Teachers' Training Schools and the diploma obtained permits entry to a special university faculty of education, the magistero, and a few other faculties. The istituti tecnici provide practical courses which prepare students for a specialized university faculty.

ITALY—(INTRODUCTORY SURVEY, STATISTICAL SURVEY)

University courses last for a minimum of four years. Examinations, which are mainly oral, are held three times a year. There are 59 universities and other Institutes of Higher Education. In 1970-71 there were 678,845 students enrolled in higher education in Italy. Study allowances of up to 500,000 lire are awarded to students according to their means and merit.

Tourism

With Alpine and Mediterranean scenery, a sunny climate, Roman buildings, Renaissance towns and palaces, paintings and sculpture, and famous opera houses, Italy attracts great numbers of tourists. During 1969 about 31 million foreign visitors went to Italy. There are about 1,500,000 hotel beds.

Visas are not required for nationals of the following countries: Algeria, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Barbados, Belgium, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Canada, Ceylon, Chile, Colombia, Cyprus, Dahomey, Denmark, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Finland, France, Gambia, Federal Republic of Germany, Greece, Guyana, Iceland, Iran, Ireland, Jamaica, Japan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lesotho, Luxembourg, Malaysia, Malta, Mexico, Monaco, Morocco, The Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Peru, Portugal, Singapore, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, Tanzania, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, United Kingdom, U.S.A., Uruguay, Yugoslavia.

Sport

Football is the most popular sport; Italy reached the final of the 1970 World Cup. Volleyball, handball, bicycle and motor racing are also important.

Public Holidays

1972: April 3 (Easter Monday), April 25 (Liberation Day), May 1 (Labour Day), May 11 (Ascension Day), June 2 (National Day), June 10 (Corpus Christi), June 29 (St. Peter and St. Paul), August 15 (The Assumption), November 1 (All Saints' Day), November 4 (National Unity Day), December 8 (The Immaculate Conception), December 25 (Christmas Day), December 26 (St. Stephen).

THE CONSTITUTION

The Constitution of the Republic of Italy was approved by the Constituent Assembly on December 22nd, 1947, and came into force on January 1st, 1948. The fundamental principles are set out in Articles 1-12 as follows:

Italy is a democratic republic based on the labour of the people.

The Republic recognises and guarantees as inviolable the rights of man, either as an individual or in a community, and it expects in return devotion to duty and the fulfilment of political, economic and social obligations.

All citizens shall enjoy equal status and shall be regarded as equal before the law, without distinction of sex, race, language or religion, and without regard to the political opinions which they may hold or their personal or social standing.

It shall be the function of the Republic to remove the economic and social inequalities which, by restricting the liberty of the individual, impede the full development of the human personality, thereby reducing the effective participation of the citizen in the political, economic and social life of the country.

The Republic recognises the right of all citizens to work, and shall do all in its power to give effect to this right.

The Republic, while remaining one and indivisible, shall recognise and promote local autonomy, fostering the greatest possible decentralisation in those services which are administered by the State, and subordinating legislative methods and principles to the exigencies of decentralised and autonomous areas.

The State and the Catholic Church shall be sovereign and independent, each in its own sphere. Their relations shall be governed by the Lateran Pact ("Patti Lateranensi"), and any modification in the pact agreed upon by both parties shall not necessitate any revision of the Constitution.

All religious denominations shall have equal liberty before the law, denominations other than the Catholic having the right to worship according to their beliefs, in so far as they do not conflict with the common law of the country.

The Republic shall do all in its power to promote the development of culture and scientific and technical research. It shall also protect and preserve the countryside and the historical and artistic monuments which are the inheritance of the nation.

The juridical system of the Italian Republic shall be in conformity with the generally recognised practice of international law. The legal rights of foreigners in the country shall be regulated by law in accordance with international practice.

Any citizen of a foreign country who is deprived of democratic liberty such as is guaranteed under the Italian Constitution, has the right of asylum within the territory of the Republic in accordance with the terms of the law, and his extradition for political offences will not be granted.

Italy repudiates war as an instrument of offence against the liberty of other nations and as a means of resolving international disputes. Italy accepts, under parity with other nations, the limitations of sovereignty necessary for the preservation of peace and justice between nations. To that end she will support and promote international organisations.

The Constitution is further divided into Parts I and II, in which are set forth respectively the rights and responsibilities of the citizen and the administration of the Republic.

PART I

SECTION I—Civic Clauses (Articles 13-28)

The liberty of the individual is inviolable and no form of detention, restriction or inspection is permitted unless it be for juridical purposes and in accordance with the provisions of the law. The domicile of a person is likewise inviolable and shall be immune from forced inspection or sequestration, except according to the provisions of the law. Furthermore, all citizens shall be free to move wheresoever they will throughout the country, and may leave it and return to it without let or hindrance. Right of public meeting, if peaceful and without arms, is guaranteed. Secret organisations of a directly or indirectly political or military nature are, however, prohibited.

Freedom in the practice of religious faith is guaranteed.

The Constitution further guarantees complete freedom of thought, speech and writing, and lays down that the Press shall be entirely free from all control or censorship. No person may be deprived of civic or legal rights on political grounds.

The death penalty is not allowed under the Constitution except in case of martial law. The accused shall be considered "not guilty" until he is otherwise proven. All punishment shall be consistent with humanitarian practice and shall be directed towards the re-education of the criminal.

SECTION II—Ethical and Social Clauses (Articles 29-34)

The Republic regards the family as the fundamental basis of society and considers the parents to be responsible for the maintenance, instruction and education of the children. The Republic shall provide economic assistance for the family, with special regard to large families, and shall make provision for maternity, infancy and youth, subject always to the liberty and freedom of choice of the individual as envisaged under the law.

Education, the arts and science shall be free, the function of the State being merely to indicate the general lines of instruction. Private entities and individuals shall have the right to conduct educational institutions without assistance from the State, but such non-State institutions must ensure to their pupils liberty and instruction equal to that in the State schools. Institutions of higher culture, universities and academies shall be autonomous within the limitations prescribed by the law.

Education is available to all and is free and obligatory for at least eight years. Higher education for students of proven merit shall be aided by scholarships and other allowances made by the Republic.

SECTION III—Economic Clauses (Articles 35-47)

The Republic shall safeguard the right to work in all its aspects, and shall promote agreement and co-operation with international organisations in matters pertaining to the regulation of labour and the rights of workers. The rights of Italian workers abroad shall be protected.

The worker shall be entitled to remuneration proportionate to the quantity and quality of his work, and in any case shall be ensured of sufficient to provide freedom and a dignified standard of life for himself and his family.

The maximum working hours shall be fixed by law, and the worker shall be entitled to a weekly day of rest and an annual holiday of nine days with pay.

ITALY—(THE CONSTITUTION)

Women shall have the same rights and, for equal work, the same remuneration as men. Conditions of work shall be regulated by their special family requirements and the needs of mother and child. The work of minors shall be specially protected.

All citizens have the right to sickness, unemployment and disability maintenance.

Liberty to organise in trade unions is guaranteed and any union may register as a legal entity, provided it is organised on a democratic basis. The right to strike is admitted within the limitations of the relevant legislation.

Private enterprise is permitted in so far as it does not run counter to the social well-being nor constitute a danger to security, freedom and human dignity.

Ownership of private property is permitted and guaranteed within the limitations laid down by the law regarding the acquisition, extent and enjoyment of private property. Inheritance and testamentary bequests shall be regulated by law.

Limitation is placed by law on private ownership of land and on its use, with a view to its best exploitation for the benefit of the community.

The Republic recognises the value of mutual co-operation and the right of the workers to participate in management.

The Republic shall encourage all forms of saving, by house, purchase, by co-operative ownership and by investment in the public utility undertakings of the country.

SECTION IV—Political Clauses (Articles 48-54)

The electorate comprises all citizens, both men and women, who have attained their majority. Voting is free, equal and secret, and its exercise is a civic duty. All citizens have the right to associate freely together in political parties, and may also petition the Chambers to legislate as may be deemed necessary.

All citizens of both sexes may hold public office on equal terms.

Defence of his country is a sacred duty of the citizen, and military service is obligatory within the limits prescribed by law. Its fulfilment shall in no way prejudice the position of the worker nor hinder the exercise of his political rights. The organisation of the armed forces shall be imbued with the spirit of democracy.

All citizens must contribute to the public expenditure, each in proportion to his capacity.

All citizens must be loyal to the Republic and observe the terms of the law and the Constitution.

PART II

SECTIONS I, II AND III (Articles 55-100)

These sections are devoted to a detailed exposition of the Legislature and legislative procedure of the Republic.

Parliament shall comprise two Chambers, namely the Chamber of Deputies and the Senate of the Republic.

The Chamber of Deputies is elected by direct universal suffrage, the number of Deputies being six hundred and thirty. All voters who on the day of the elections are twenty-five years of age, may be elected Deputies.

Seats are apportioned by dividing the number of inhabitants of the Republic, as shown in the last general census, by six hundred and thirty, and allocating the seats proportionally to the population of each constituency.

The Senate of the Republic is elected on regional basis, the number of eligible Senators being three hundred and fifteen. No Region shall have less than seven Senators. Val d'Aosta has only one Senator.

Seats are allocated proportionally among the Regions in the same way as for the Chamber of Deputies.

The Chamber of Deputies and the Senate of the Republic are elected for five years.

The term of each House cannot be extended except by law and only in the case of war.

Members of Parliament shall receive remuneration fixed by law.

The President of the Republic must be a citizen of at least fifty years of age and in full enjoyment of all civic and political rights. He shall be elected for a period of seven years (Articles 84-85).

The Government shall consist of the President of the Council and the Ministers who themselves shall form the Council. The President of the Council, or Prime Minister, shall be nominated by the President of the Republic, who shall also appoint the Ministers on the recommendation of the Prime Minister (Article 92).

SECTION IV (Articles 101-113) sets forth the judicial system and procedure.

SECTION V (Articles 114-133) deals with the division of the Republic into regions, provinces and communes, and sets forth the limits and extent of autonomy enjoyed by the regions. Under Article 131 the regions are enumerated as follows:

Piedmont	Molise
Lombardy	Campania
Veneto	Puglia
Liguria	Basilicata
Emilia-Romagna	Calabria
Tuscany	Sicily
Umbria	Sardinia
Marche	Trentino-Alto Adige
Lazio	Friuli-Venezia Giulia
Abruzzi	Val d'Aosta

The last five-named regions shall have a wider form of autonomy based on constitutional legislation specially adapted to their regional characteristics (Article 116). Each region shall be administered by a Regional Council, in which is vested the legislative power and which may make suggestions for legislation to the Chambers, and the "Giunta regionale" which holds the executive power (Article 121).

The final articles provide for the establishment of the "Corte Costituzionale" to deal with constitutional questions and any revisions which may be found necessary after the Constitution has come into operation.

JUDICIAL SYSTEM

Corte Costituzionale: Palazzo Della Consulta, Piazza del Quirinale 41, Rome; consists of 15 judges, one third nominated by the President of the Republic, one third elected by Parliament in joint session, one third by the ordinary and administrative supreme courts; Pres. Prof. MICHELE FRAGALI (acting); Sec.-Gen. Dott. ALDO MONACO.

Consiglio Superiore della Magistratura: Piazza della Indipendenza 6, Rome; Pres. the President of the Republic; Vice-Pres. AVV. ALFREDO AMATUCCI.

Consiglio di Stato: Palazzo Spada, Piazza Capo di Ferro 13, Rome; established in accordance with Article 10 of the Constitution; has both consultative and judicial functions; Pres. GAETANO VETRANO.

Corte dei Conti: Via Baiamonti 25, Rome, and Via Barberini 38, Rome; functions as the court of public accounts; Pres. Dott. EDUARDO GRECO; Sec.-Gen. Dott. MARCELLO VALENTINI.

Corte Suprema di Cassazione: Palazzo di Giustizia, Rome; supreme court of civil and criminal appeal; First Pres. Dott. GAETANO SCARPELLO; Vice-Pres. Dott. GIUSEPPE MAZLETTA.

The Constitutional Court was established in 1956 and is an autonomous constitutional body, standing apart from the judicial system. Its most important function is to pronounce on the constitutionality of legislation both subsequent and prior to the present Constitution of 1948. It also judges accusations brought against the President of the Republic or ministers.

At the base of the system of penal jurisdiction are the Preture (District Courts), where offences carrying a sentence of up to three years imprisonment are tried. Above the Preture are the Tribunali (Tribunals) and the Corti di Assise presso i Tribunali (Assize Courts attached to the Tribunals), where the graver offences are dealt with. From these courts appeal lies to the Corti d'Appello (Courts of Appeal) and the parallel Corti di Assise d'Appello (Assize Courts of Appeal). Final appeal may be made, on juridical grounds only, to the Corte Suprema di Cassazione.

Civil cases may be taken in the first instance to the Giudici Conciliatori (Justices of the Peace), Preture or Tribunali, according to the economic value of the case. Appeal from the Giudici Conciliatori lies to the Preture, from the Preture to the Tribunali, from the Tribunali to the Corti d'Appello, and finally, as in penal justice, to the Corte Suprema di Cassazione on juridical grounds only.

Special departments for cases concerning labour relations or young persons may be attached to civil courts. Cases concerned with the public service and its employees are tried by the Consiglio di Stato.

RELIGION

More than 90 per cent of the population of Italy profess the Roman Catholic faith.

Under the terms of the Lateran Pact, signed in 1929 between Mussolini and the Papal Secretary of State, Cardinal Gasparri, the Catholic Apostolic Roman Religion was recognised as the official religion of Italy, and instruction in the Roman Catholic doctrine became compulsory in Italian schools. The Holy See was accorded sovereign rights in the Vatican City, which was granted extraterritorial rights as an independent State. Furthermore, the person of the Pope was declared sacred and inviolable, and Cardinals were granted honours formerly only accorded to princes of the blood royal. In this way the dispute between the Papacy and the Italian Government, which had begun in 1870 with the creation of a united Italy, was terminated.

The question of relations between the Roman Catholic Church and the Italian State arose in a sharpened form during the debates on the Constitution in the post-war Constituent Assembly. Article 5 of the draft Constitution, which formally accepted the Lateran Pact of 1929 in its entirety, occasioned a prolonged and heated debate, but was finally accepted on March 26th, 1947, by 350 votes to 149.

In October 1968 the Holy See agreed to pay taxes on its Italian shareholdings amounting to over 100,000 million lire, thus ending a five-year old controversy between Church and State.

THE PRESS

In view of Italy's population the number of daily newspapers at 81 is rather small, with the bulk of them (46, of which 10 in Milan) appearing in the industrial north, 23 in central Italy (including 20 in Rome), six in the south and the remainder on the islands. Between 1944 and 1967 no less than 161 newspapers ceased publication. The total daily circulation is 4.7 million, less than 10 per 100 people but the northern third of the population takes two-thirds of this circulation. Of the 17 dailies with over 100,000 copies each, only three exceed 200,000 each and two exceed 400,000. Eleven of these appear in the north, five in central and one in southern Italy. There are also 15 medium-sized dailies selling 50-100,000 copies and 61 small dailies with less than 50,000 copies each.

Rome and Milan are the only real press centres with 20 and 10 dailies each respectively. Only two dailies manage to sustain a national circulation, Corriere della Sera and Il Giorno, both in Milan, followed by Turin's La Stampa circulating in the north and centre. Otherwise the large dailies circulate in and reflect their own region; e.g. La Nazione serves Florence and its region, Il Tempo Rome and the centre, Genoa's Il Secolo XIX extends throughout the Italian Riviera, Il Mattino serves the Naples region and l'Ora Palermo. Such papers make up for a general lack of smaller dailies; there are, however, many weekly papers.

Political controversy receives great emphasis in the press as most papers reflect some shade of the political spectrum. Foreign news is well covered—frequently, owing to the availability of agency reports, better than local news. Dailies are generally characterized by a conservatism of printing and layout except for Il Giorno, one of the newer dailies. Most papers have a traditional literary page or "terza pagina" devoted to short stories, travel-ogues and articles by essayists and critics. All dailies have a weekly page devoted to book reviews.

Most newspapers are independent of political parties, only about 20 per cent of the total circulation of dailies having political affiliations. Furthermore the number of official party organs has declined to very few; among them Avanti and Unità, the chief organs of the Socialist and Communist parties respectively, each produce editions in Milan and Rome; Il Popolo belongs to the Christian Democrat party.

The daily press is experiencing economic difficulties at the present time and a few evening papers have been forced to close. A consequent tendency to concentration of ownership is beginning to be detectable. In November 1971 a 5-billion-lire preferential aid bill was voted for the press, to be received mainly in the form of cheaper newsprint, smaller-circulation newspapers paying lower prices than the larger ones. Large industrial groups own over half of the total circulation of dailies; Catholic organizations own about 9 per cent. A further 10 per cent is independently owned. Most of the important dailies, including nine of the seventeen papers with over 100,000 copies each, are owned by groups of industrial enterprises or by the owners of such enterprises. Thus Corriere della Sera is associated with F.lli Crespi, La Stampa and Stampa Sera with Fiat, Il Messaggero and Il Secolo XIX with F.lli Perrone, La Nazione and Il Resto del Carlino with Eridiana, La Notte with Italcementi, etc. The Confederation of Italian Industries has a controlling interest in some fourteen smaller papers including the important Il Sole/24 Ore and Il Globo.

Another category of papers comprises those supported by official organizations such as E.N.I. or I.R.I. or by financial institutions. Examples are: Il Giorno (E.N.I.)

and Il Mattino and Gazzetta del Mezzogiorno (both by Banco di Napoli). Finally the Catholic and Christian Democrat organizations have a controlling interest in about a dozen papers; Avvenire (formerly L'Italia; Milan) is owned totally by the Church.

The most popular dailies in order of circulation are: Milan's Corriere della Sera (600,000) Turin's La Stampa (404,000), L'Unità (Milan edition 450,000; Rome edition 150,000), Rome's Il Tempo (226,000), and Il Messaggero (225,000), Milan's Il Giorno (230,000), Florence's La Nazione (200,000), Bologna's Il Resto del Carlino (186,000) and Rome's Paese Sera (181,000). The three dailies accorded most prestige for the standard of their articles and news coverage are the nationally circulating Corriere della Sera, La Stampa and Il Giorno, although the latter includes light features and cartoons. The most serious Rome daily is Il Tempo, and the Vatican daily L'Osservatore Romano has a world-wide Catholic readership. The leading financial paper is Milan's Il Sole/24 Ore closely followed by Il Globo in Rome.

There are some 430 non-daily newspapers and over 4,000 periodicals. The illustrated weekly papers and magazines frequently have higher sales than the average daily. Ten of the largest appear in Milan, five in Rome and one in Turin. Many tend towards sensationalism, particularly the popular Domenica del Corriere, which has a circulation of over one million, and the right wing Oggi and Gente. Other weekly illustrated periodicals with a large circulation include Tempo, Epoca, Settimana Incom and Europeo. Among the serious and influential magazines should be mentioned Panorama, Il Borghese, the financial Mondo Economico, the small circulating political and cultural Il Ponte, the Socialist L'Espresso and the Communist Vie Nuove and Rinascita.

CASSA PER IL MEZZOGIORNO

SOUTHERN ITALY DEVELOPMENT FUND

Piazzale Kennedy 20, Eur, Rome

President: Prof. GABRIELE PESCATORE.

The Fund was set up in 1950 to develop the Southern areas of the country. By the end of 1965 contracts for public works worth 1,522,000 million lire had been awarded. The Fund was extended in June 1965 until 1980, with the task of implementing 5-year plans co-ordinated with the national economic plan. During the 1965-69 period, the Fund was endowed with 1,900,000 million lire. The following are completed projects supervised by the Fund:

Land Reclamation and Irrigation: More than 7,400 kilometres of river channel control, embankments and drains have been completed. Over 940,000 hectares of land have been drained or protected from floods, and 11,478 kilometres of irrigation canals and networks laid, 6,917 kilometres of new agricultural roads constructed and 2,024 kilometres improved.

Aqueducts: The Fund has tackled the drinking water supply problem by laying 13,279 kilometres of mains and constructing 2,533 water towers with a capacity of about 1,485,675 cubic metres.

Transport and Communications: 3,409 kilometres of new trunk roads have been built and 16,070 kilometres improved; also the construction of 819 kilometres of motor highways is nearing completion. The tracks of numerous railway lines have been doubled. Fifty-one port improvements have been approved with an expenditure of 39,000 million lire. Construction is nearing completion. For the improvement of the airfield and port system in the South, projects totalling 7.7 billion lire have been approved.

Hospitals: 29 hospitals have been completed and 34 are under construction with an approved expenditure of 41,500 million lire, in centres of the Southern Regions.

Industry: Numerous projects have been approved for setting up industrial estates in selected areas, the Fund's contributions towards this total being 46,464 million lire. In the private sector the Fund has operated a twofold industrialization project: (a) credit is extended through three specialized institutes in the South (ISVEIMER for Southern Italy, IRFIS for Sicily, and CIS for Sardinia); 6,238 loans of 1,457,501 million lire were approved; also, loans for a total amount of 1,136,571 million lire have been granted by other industrial credit banks. (b) Straight grants to 8,691 small and medium-sized enterprises of about 248,757 million lire. 93,186 loans valued at 27,281 million lire have been granted to the handicraft industries. Employment in private Southern manufacturing industries should increase to 638,000 workers by 1974.

Private Land Improvement: By the end of 1968 the Fund had approved the construction of: 7,763 kilometres of farm roads; 64,161 wells, tanks and reservoirs; 2,097 kilometres of transmission lines; 76 cheese factories; 436 olive oil mills; 540 wine factories. In addition about 218,339 hectares have been prepared for farming and 230,677 hectares have been irrigated. A large portion of coastal population has been supported with 14,401 contributions totalling 37,931 million lire for the fishing industry.

Education: The Fund has completed 147 schools for industrial training and 21 agricultural schools with 120 branches have been opened. 604 kindergartens have been completed to a value of over 14,000 million lire. 6,175 loans for school buildings to a value of 8,070 million lire have been granted.

Tourism: Projects to the value of 57,003 million lire have been completed. They include: local and sightseeing roads, archeological excavations, modern museums, monument restorations, and improvements to grottoes and spas. The Fund has also financed 1,727 loans for the construction of 51,003 rooms with 94,465 beds in a hotel project. An intercontinental airport is being completed in Calabria.

TRANSPORT

Direzione Generale della Motorizzazione Civile e del Trasporti in Concessione: Rome, Viale del Policlinico 2; Dir.-Gen. Ing. PIETRO D'ARMINI; publ. Trasporti Pubblici (monthly); controls road transport and traffic, and public transport services (railways operated by private companies, tramways, motor-buses, trolley-buses, funicular railways and inland waterways).

RAILWAYS

A very extensive programme of road extension and improvement in all spheres is in progress at the moment. There are 43.00 km. of motorway in operation and a further 2,000 km. under construction. The "Autostrada del Sole" (the "Sun Highway"), which connects the northern regions to the southern from Milan to Salerno, via Rome, is 755 km. in length. It was begun in 1956 and completed in 1964. All the motorways are toll roads except for the Autostrada from Salerno to Reggio Calabria. About half of the motorway network is the responsibility of the Autostrade Corporation (IRI Group) and half is the responsibility of ANAS and other corporations.

ATOMIC ENERGY

Comitato Nazionale per l'Energia Nucleare—CNEN (National Committee for Nuclear Energy): 00198 Rome, Via Regina Margherita 125; f. 1960; Pres. Gen. SILVIO GAVA; Vice-Pres. Prof. CARLO SALVETTI; publ. Notiziario (monthly).

In August 1960 CNEN succeeded the National Committee for Nuclear Research (CNRN), which was set up in 1952.

The new Committee inherits the tasks of pure and applied research, and must also maintain technical control over industrial nuclear power plants which are being built in increasing numbers. It promotes and encourages the development of industrial applications of nuclear energy, and co-operates internationally.

CNEN, which has a staff of about 3,500, owns the research centres of Frascati, Casaccia, Saluggia, Trisaia and Bologna. It prospects for uranium, undertakes research into the production of nuclear fuels and materials, constructs prototype power reactors, applies nuclear energy to agriculture and medicine, and trains personnel. Research is being carried out on fast breeder reactors and on the CIRENE project, a heavy water moderated reactor. Other projects include the ROVI 200 MW reactor for desalination, an 18,000-ton nuclear ship and two reprocessing plants at Trisaia.

CNEN advises the Foreign Ministry on matters related to the Italian partnership in the International Atomic Energy Agency, the European Nuclear Energy Agency and EURATOM.

Istituto Nazionale di Fisica Nucleare—INFN (National Institute of Nuclear Physics): Casella Postale 70, 00044 Frascati, Rome; f. 1951; eight sections in Universities of Turin, Milan, Padua, Bologna, Pisa, Rome, Genoa and Naples; sub-sections in Universities of Florence, Trieste, Bari and Public Health Institute in Rome; groups in Universities of Catania, Messina and Palermo, forming the Sicilian section, in University of Pavia, Politecnico of Milan and at the National Centre for Photogrammetry in Bologna; Pres. Prof. GIORGIO SALVINI.

Since 1952 the Institute has been financed by CNEN, for whom it conducts basic research.

AGIP Nucleare S.p.A.: P.O.B. 1629, Milan; f. 1968; develops processes concerning nuclear fuel cycles and nuclear reactors, and operates on an industrial scale in the field of nuclear fuel cycles.

Associazione Nazionale di Ingegneria Nucleare (ANDIN): Piazza Sallustio 24, Rome; studies problems in the engineering construction of nuclear installations; Pres. Prof. NOVERINO FALETTI.

Comitato Permanente per i Problemi dell'Impiego Pacifico dell'Energia Nucleare e per i Rapporti con EURATOM (Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Atomic Energy): Piazza Venezia 11, Rome; working groups which elaborate the Italian industrial point of view on nuclear problems which may arise in Italy or Europe; Pres. VITTORIO DE BRASI.

National Laboratory at Frascati: Casella Postale 70, Frascati, Rome; equipped with 1,100-MeV electron synchrotron since 1959, with a 450-MeV electron and positron linear accelerator and with a $2 \times 1,500$ MeV electron and positron storage ring ("Adone"); Dir. Prof. I. FEDERICO QUERCIA.

There are eleven other smaller accelerators elsewhere in Italy.

Casaccia Centre for Nuclear Studies: C.P. 2400, 00100 Rome, S. Maria di Galeria; Director: Dr. Ing. GIANFRANCO FRANCO.

The Centre, which is particularly concerned with nuclear applied research, is equipped with the following reactors:

A Triga Mark II reactor, whose original power was of 100 kW, has been modified for operation at 1 MW, and has operated at this power since 1967. Fuelled by 20 per cent enriched uranium, it is used for research and training.

The Rana reactor, a swimming-pool (graphite-reflected and natural/water cooled) reactor with an operating power of 10 kW, is particularly suited to neutron physics measurements.

The Rospo reactor, originally an organic reactor, is used, after modifications, as a light water reactor for the development of the core of the nuclear ship E. Fermi.

The Ritmo reactor, a swimming-pool, zero power experimental reactor, used within the framework of the neutron physics of water systems.

The Tapiro reactor, a U-235 fast neutron reactor reached maximum thermal power (5kW) in December 1971. It is used for experimental purposes within the framework of the Italian fast-reactors programme.

The Centre also develops biological research—for which laboratories, a gamma-field and a gamma facility for high-dose irradiation of biological materials have been installed—concerned with animal radiobiology studies, health physics, applications of nuclear energy to agriculture.

At Casaccia there are also electronic laboratories planning the electronic instrumentation for experiments at the CNEN research centre and the Frascati National Laboratory, geomining analysis laboratories, chemistry and metallurgical facilities, hot cells for work on "hot" materials, and a waste disposal laboratory and plants.

Centro Informazioni Studi Esperienze (CISE) (Information, Study and Experimental Centre): Mailing address: Casella Postale 3986, 20100 Milan; location: Via Redeciesio 12, Segrate, Milan; f. 1946; Pres. Prof. ARNALDO M. ANGE-LINI; Man. Dir. Prof. CORRADO GENESIO; Gen. Man. Prof. ENRICO CERRAI; publ. Energia Nucleare (monthly). Sponsored by ENEL (Ente Nazionale per l'Energia Elettrica); devoted to research and development in nuclear reactor engineering and technology, material chemistry and technology, advanced electronics, and nuclear physics.

Centro di Studi Nucleari "Enrico Fermi" (Enrico Fermi Centre for Nuclear Studies): Polytechnic School, Via Ponzio 34/3, 20133 Milan; f. 1957; Dir. Prof. GIUSEPPE BOLLA.

Equipped with a 50 kW research reactor.

Centro Siciliano di Fisica Nucleare e di Struttura della Materia (CSFN & SM) (Sicilian Centre of Nuclear Physics and Structure of Matter): 57 Corso Italia, 95129 Catania; f. 1955; equipped for experiments on nuclear spectroscopy, photonuclear reactions, nuclear fission and theoretical nuclear physics, positron annihilation, ion implantation and structure of matter; Pres. Prof. A. RUBBINO.

Ente Nazionale per l'Energia Elettrica (ENEL): Rome, Via G.B. Martini (Piazza Verdi); The Italian State Power Agency has nuclear stations in operation in the following areas:

Latina: a 210 MWe (gas-graphite) plant.

Garigliano: a 160 MWe (BWR) plant.

Trino Vercellese: a 272 MWe (PWR) plant.

Laboratori Elettronici e Nucleari, S.p.A. (LABEN) (Electronic and Nuclear Laboratories): Via Bassini 15, 20133 Milan; multi-channel analysers for nuclear spectrometry. Analogue-to-digital converters and auxiliary units for digital computers. Scalers, programmers, nuclear counting chains. Industrial digital instrumentation. PCM telemetry for satellites. Spaceborne instrumentation for space research; Dir. Dr. CARLO BONSIGNORI.

SNAM Progetti S.p.A.: P.O.B. 4169, S. Donato Milanese, Milan; f. 1966; designs chemical, petrochemical and nuclear plants, acts as contractor for drilling operations and conducts research in the chemical and petrochemical fields.

Società Ricerche Impianti Nucleari (SORIN): 13040 Saluggia, Vercelli; f. 1956; Dir. Dott. Ing. S. CUSÒDERO.

Undertakes applied industrial research; radioisotope research; development and production for medical and industrial applications; biomedical research and development, production of cardiac implantable pacemakers and devices for peritoneal dialysis.
